PREFACE

The Spandakārikās are a number of verses that serve as a sort of commentary on the Śiva-sūtras. According to Śaivāgama, the Divine Consciousness is not simply cold, inert intellection. It is rather spanda, active; dynamic, throbbing with life, creative pulsation.

In Śiva-sūtras, it is the prakāśa aspect of the Divine that is emphasized; in Spandakārikās, it is the vimarśa aspect that is emphasized. Together, these two books give an integral view of Śaiva philosophy.

Kṣemarāja has written a commentary on Spandakārikās, titled Spanda-nirṇaya. He is fond of sesquipedalian compounds, long and windy sentences, but he is very profound in the comprehension of the subject and so cannot be ignored.

I have tried to provide a readable translation of both the kārikās and the Spanda-nirṇaya commentary.

Each kārikā (verse) is given both in Devanāgarī and Roman script, followed by its translation in English. This is followed by Kṣemarāja's commentary in Sanskrit. Then follows an English translation of the commentary. After this, copious notes are added on important and technical words. Finally, I have given a running exposition of each kārikā in my own words.

The text and commentary published in the Kashmir Series of Texts and Studies have been adopted. A few misprints that occurred in the above edition have been corrected with the assistance of Svāmī Lakṣmaṇa Joo. I am deeply indebted to him for his luminous exposition of this important text.

A long Introduction has been given in the beginning of the book, and a glossary of technical terms and an Index have been appended at the end.

BLESSINGS

Spanda Kārikās is one of the important works of Kashmir Śaivism. The doctrine of Spanda is scientific. Modern scientists have discovered that the world was created from the vibration of the first explosion and that the universe is still expanding. Yet so far they have not been able to find out how the first explosion occurred. However, the ancient scriptures of the Spanda doctrine have always contained the knowledge that this vibration is the Spanda or throb of the Absolute Reality, the Universal Consciousness which is also called Śiva. The world came into existence with the throb of His opening eye. Jñāneśvara Mahārāja has described Lord Śiva as having the mudrā of expanding universe.

It is a matter of great satisfaction to know that the work which reveals this truth is now available in English. Modern scientists will definitely make use of it to enhance their knowledge. In America when I meet with scientists, I always refer to the doctrine of Spanda. They express interest and desire to read about it.

I welcome Jaideva Singh, who helps to spread this supreme wisdom of Kashmir. In the company of great beings he has acquired the knowledge of the truth. He has also translated and explained in English such great works of Kashmir Śaivism as Śiva Sūtras, Pratyabhijñāhṛdayam, and Vijñāna Bhairava. In this way, he has helped the people of English speaking countries who desired to know this doctrine. I hope his work in this direction continues for a long time.

Let the humanity of the world benefit by the knowledge contained in this work.

INTRODUCTION

Spandakārikās—The importance of the book

Spandakārikās are a sort of commentary on the Śiva-sūtras. The word kārikā means 'a collection of verses on grammatical, philosophical or scientific subjects.' The word spanda literally means a 'throb.' It connotes dynamism or the dynamic aspect of the Divine, the Divine creative pulsation.

The Self, according to Spandakārikās, is not simply a witnessing consciousness, but is characterized by both cognition and activity. He who is in communion with this active Self can alone rise to the status of his highest being.

The author of Spandakārikās

The opinion regarding the authorship of Spandakārikās is divided. According to Bhāskara and Utpala Vaiṣṇava or Bhaṭṭa Utpala, both of whom flourished in the second and third quarters of the 10th century A.D., the author of these kārikās was Kallaṭa who was the chief disciple of Vasugupta.

Bhāskara says in his Śiva-sūtra-vārttika that Kallaṭa wrote a commentary, called Spanda-sūtras on the three sections of the Śiva-sūtras, and a commentary, called Tattvārtha-cintāmaṇi on the fourth section of the Śiva-sūtras.¹

Bhaṭṭa Utpala, in his commentary, on the Spandakārikās, entitled Spandapradīpikā, says in the 53rd verse that Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭa duly versified the secret doctrine after receiving it from his guru (spiritual guide) Vasugupta who had clear insight into Reality.²

Kṣemarāja and Maheśvarānanda attribute the authorship of the kārikās to Vasugupta. Both refer to the following verse :

¹व्याकरोत्त्रिकमेतेभ्यः स्पन्दसूत्रैः स्वकैस्ततः ।

तत्त्वार्थचिन्तामण्याख्यटीकया खण्डमन्तिमम् ॥ S. S. V. pp. 2-3.

²वस्तुगुप्तादवाप्येदं गुरोस्तत्त्वार्थदर्शिनः ।

रहस्यं श्लोकयामास सम्यक् श्रीभट्टकल्लटः ॥

लब्ध्वाप्यलभ्यमेतज्ज्ञानधनं हृद्गुहान्तःकृतनिहिते ।
वसुगुप्तवच्छिवाय हि भवति सदा सर्वलोकस्य ॥

“As on the attainment of this treasure of knowledge which is difficult of attainment, and on its being well preserved in the cave of the heart, it has been for the good of Vasugupta, so also on the attainment and on its being well preserved in the cave of the heart, it would always be for the good of all.”

This verse is, however, not found in the recension of Bhaṭṭa Utpala, Kallaṭa and Rāmakaṇṭha.

In his commentary on Spandakārikās, called vṛtti, Kallaṭa makes the following concluding remark :

दुब्धं महादेवगिरौ महेशस्वप्नोपदिष्टाच्छिवसूत्रसिन्धोः ।
स्पन्दामृतं यद्वसुगुप्तपादैः श्रीकल्लटस्तत्रकटीचकार ॥

On the basis of this verse, some writers have concluded that Kallaṭa was the author of the Spandakārikās. But Kallaṭa specifically says Yat Spandāmṛtaṁ Vasuguptapādaiḥ dṛbdham, i.e. ‘the Spandakārikās which were composed by Vasugupta. spandāmṛtam is only another name for Spandakārikās. The word dṛbdham only means ‘strung together, arranged, composed’ and Vasuguptapādaiḥ only means ‘by revered Vasugupta.’ Regarding himself, Kallaṭa only claims to have brought it to the notice of the people. “Vasugupta-pādaiḥ dṛbdham” clearly shows that the Kārikās were composed by Vasugupta.

The truth, therefore, seems to be that Vasugupta actually composed the Kārikās, taught them to Kallaṭa, and Kallaṭa only publicized them.

Commentaries

Four commentaries are available on these Kārikās, viz., (1) the vṛtti by Kallaṭa, (2) the Vivṛti of Rāmakaṇṭha, (3) the Spandapradīpikā of Bhaṭṭa Utpala and (4) the Spandasandoha and Spanda-nirṇaya of Kṣemarāja.

Kallaṭa flourished in the second and third quarter of the 9th century A.D. On these kārikās, he has written a commentary, called vṛtti. It gives a simple meaning of these verses. He has divided the kārikās into three niḥṣyandas or sections. The first niḥṣyanda contains twentyfive verses, and is designated by him as svarūpa-spanda. It gives the essential nature of spanda. The second section is named by him sahaja-vidyodaya i.e. the emergence of Sahaja-vidyā. It contains seven Kārikās (verses) from 26 to 32. The third section is named vibhūti-spanda or supranormal powers acquired through spanda. It contains twenty verses from 33 to 52.

Rāmakaṇṭha wrote a commentary, called Vivṛti. He calls himself a pupil of Utpaladeva, the grand teacher of Abhinavagupta. He, therefore, flourished in the second and third quarters of the 10th century A.D. He closely followed the Vṛtti of Kallaṭa in his interpretation of the kārikās. He himself says so in the colophon of his commentary Sampūrṇā iyaṃ vṛtṭyanusāriṇī spandavivṛtiḥ. "This Spanda-vivṛti closely following the vṛtti (of Kallaṭa) is finished." His division, however, of the sections of the Kārikās is different. His first section includes sixteen verses and he names it vyatirekopapattinirdeśaḥ i.e. the section that points out the proved distinction of the knower from the known.

His second section includes eleven verses and is named vyatirikta-svabhāvopalabdhiḥ i.e. the acquisition of distinct nature.

His third section includes only three verses and is named Viśva-svasvabhāva-śaktyupapattiḥ i.e. the universe is only a manifestation of one's own essential nature.

His fourth section includes twenty-one verses and is named, abhedopalabdhiḥ i.e. realization of identity with the Divine. He adds one more verse to this section expressive of the obeisance of the writer to his guru.

Bhaṭṭa Utpala or Utpala Vaiṣṇava wrote a commentary entitled Spandapradīpikā. He flourished in the second and third quarters of the 10th century A.D. He says in his commentary that he was born in a place called Nārāyaṇa in Kashmir and that his father's name was Trivikrama. His commentary consists mostly of parallel quotations from other sources.

Kṣemarāja first of all wrote a commentary, called Spandasandoha only on the first verse of Spandakārikā. Later on, at the persistent request of his pupil, Śūra he wrote Spandanirṇaya, a commentary on the whole book. He flourished in the last quarter of the 10th and first quarter of the 11th century. He was Abhinavagupta's cousin and pupil. His commentary on Spandakārikā is exceedingly scholarly and bears the stamp of his teacher's profundity. According to him, Bhaṭṭa Lollaṭa had also written a commentary on these kārikās, but that is not available now.

He has divided the kārikās into four sections. The first section consists of twenty-five verses. Like Kallaṭa he has named this section as svarūpa-spanda. His second section consists of seven verses, and like Kallaṭa, he names it Sahaja-vidyodaya.

His third section consists of nineteen verses, and like Kallaṭa, he names it Vibhūti-spanda. Kallaṭa has added one more verse in this section which is only expressive of homage to the guru, and cannot, by any stretch of imagination, be included in Vibhūti (supernormal powers). Kṣemarāja has thrown this laudatory verse and one more verse descriptive of the fruit of this knowledge in a separate fourth section.

What is Spanda ?

Spanda is a very technical word of this system. Literally, it is some sort of movement or throb. But as applied to the Divine, it cannot mean movement.

Abhinavagupta makes this point luminously clear in these lines :

“स्पन्दनं च किञ्चित्चलनम् । स्वरूपाच्च यदि वस्त्वन्तराक्रमणं, तच्चलनमेव, न किञ्चित्त्वम् । नोचेत्, चलनमेव न किञ्चित् । तस्मात्स्वरूप एव क्रमादिपरिहारेण चमत्कारात्मिका उच्छलता..... स्पन्द इत्युच्यते” । (परा०त्रि०वि०, पृष्ठ २०७)

“Spandana means some sort of movement. If there is movement from the essential nature of the Divine towards another object, it is definite movement, not some sort, otherwise, movement itself would be nothing. Therefore, Spanda is only a throb, a heaving of spiritual rapture in the essential nature of the Divine which excludes all succession. This is the significance of the word Kiñcit in kiñcit calanam which is to be interpreted as “movement as it were.”

Movement or motion occurs only in a spatio-temporal framework. The Supreme transcends all notions of space and time. Spanda, therefore, in the case of the Supreme is neither physical motion, nor psychological activity like pain and pleasure, nor prāṇic activity like hunger or thirst. It is the throb of the ecstasy of the Divine I-consciousness (vimarśa). The Divine I-consciousness is spiritual dynamism. It is the Divine creative pulsation. It is the throb of Śiva's svātantrya or absolute Freedom.

If Spanda is not any kind of movement, how can the application of this word be justified to the activity of the Supreme, for the word Spanda means 'a somewhat of motion?' This is the explanation offered by Abhinavagupta.

“स्पन्दनं च किञ्चित् चलनम् । एषैव च किञ्चिद्रूपता यद् अचलमपि चलम् आभासते इति, प्रकाशस्वरूपं हि मनागपि नातिरिच्यते अतिरिच्यते इव इति अचलमेव आभासभेदयुक्तमेव च भाति इति ।”

(I. Pr. V. I. 5, 14, p. 208)

“Spandana means a somewhat of movement. The characteristic of 'somewhat' consists in the fact that even the immovable appears 'as if moving,' because though the light of consciousness does not change in the least, yet it appears to be changing as it were. The immovable appears as if having a variety of manifestation.”

Spanda is, therefore, spiritual dynamism without any movement in itself but serving as the causa sine qua non of all movements.

The Infinite Perfect Divine Consciousness always has vimarśa or Self-awareness. This Self-awareness is a 'subtle activity which is spiritual dynamism, not any physical, psychological or prāṇic activity. As Utpaladeva puts it in Īśvarapratyabhijñā :

स एव विमृशत्त्वेन नियतेन महेश्वरः ।

विमर्श एव देवस्य शुद्धे ज्ञानिक्रिये यतः ॥

(I, 8. 11)

The Divine is termed the great Lord (Maheśvara) because of His ever-present, immutable Self-awareness (vimarśa). That Self awareness in its absolute Freedom constitutes Divine (śuddha—pure) knowledge and activity.” Spanda is only another name of Self-awareness or Vimarśa. As Kṣemarāja puts it, Spanda also connotes the svātantrya or absolute Freedom of the Divine (Bhagavataḥ svātantrya-śaktiḥ). Vimarśa, parāśakti, svātantrya, aiśvarya, karṭṛta, sphurattā, sāra, hṛdaya, and spanda are synonymous in Śaivāgama.

Sections of Spandakārikās

While the verses of the text are practically the same in all the editions available, they have been divided under different sections somewhat differently by each editor and commentator. The topics under each section are given in this book as described by Kṣemarāja.

I. SECTION

Svarūpaspandaḥ or Spanda as the Essential Nature of Śiva

1. The first verse of this section describes Spanda-śakti represented by the unmeṣa (emergence) and nimeṣa (submergence) of the Śakti (primal energy) of Śiva. As Kṣemarāja puts it, it is the essential nature of Śiva and also that of the empirical individual (sphurattāsāra-spandaśaktimaya-svasvabhāva).

Unmeṣa and nimeṣa are only figuratively spoken of as occurring one after the other. As a matter of fact, they occur simultaneously (yugapadevomeṣa-nimeṣobhayarūpām pratibhām bhagavatīm vicinvantu mahādhiyaḥ).

In activity, there is no depletion of Spanda-śakti as there is of physical energy. Leliḥānā sadā devī sadā pūrṇā ca bhāsate i. e. This goddess is always engaged in exercising her energy in withdrawal and yet always appears as replete.”

वस्तुतस्तु न किञ्चिदुदेति व्ययते वा, केवलं स्पन्दशक्तिरेव भगवत्यक्रमापि तथातथाभासरूपतया स्फुरन्त्युदेतीव व्ययते इव च ।

(Commentary on the first Kārikā)

In reality, nothing arises, and nothing subsides. It is only the divine Spandaśakti which, though free of succession, appears in different aspects as if flashing in view and as if subsiding.”

Kṣemarāja believes that there is close correlation between the spanda system and the krama system. In his Spandanirṇaya commentary, Kṣemarāja interprets the phrase śakti-cakra-vibhava-prabhavam as representing the Mahārtha or Krama ideal of five-fold functioning through the agency of the deities Sṛṣṭi, Rakta Kālī, etc. In explaining vibhava—he uses the very technical terms of Krama Śāstra. Vibhava udyogāvabhāsana-carvaṇā-vilāpanātmā kriḍāḍambaraḥ—udyoga meaning creative activity, avabhāsana, meaning maintenance, carvaṇā (absorption), and vilāpana, meaning the assumption of the indefinable state (anākhyā).

2. The second verse says that the world is contained in the spanda principle, and comes out of it. The world being contained in spanda and coming out of it does not mean that the world is anything different from Śiva as a walnut is different from the bag in which it is contained. Being contained in and coming out of, are only limitations of the human language. The world is Śiva as reflections in a mirror are the mirror itself. The world consisting of the subject, object and means of knowledge cannot really conceal Śiva, because without the light of Śiva, they themselves cannot appear. The world is inherent in Spanda just as a banyan tree exists as potency in the seed.

3. The third verse maintains that even in the differing states viz., waking, dream, and deep sleep, the spanda principle remains the same, viz., as the invariable of Experient of all the states.

4. While states of experience like pleasure, pain, etc. differ, the Experient cannot change; for it is the Experient that connects the differing states as the experience of the identical Experient.

5. Reality is neither psychological subject nor the psychophysical experience, nor is it mere void. Reality or Spanda is the underlying basis of the psychological subject, it is the eternal Experient that can never be reduced to an object.

6 & 7. It is from the Spanda principle that the group of senses acquires its power of going forth towards the objects, maintaining them in perception for a while and then withdrawing them towards the centre.

8. It is not the will or desire of the empirical individual that moves the senses towards their objects. He derives this power from the spanda principle—the dynamism of Śiva.

9. It is on account of āṇava, māyīya and kārma mala that the empirical individual is unable to realize the spanda principle.

10. When the limited ego or āṇava mala of the individual is dissolved, he acquires the true characteristic of the spanda principle, viz., innate knowledge and activity.

11. When the yogi realizes the spanda principle, he knows that this is his essential Self, and not his empirical self.

12 & 13. The experience of void does not prove that there is no Experiencer, for without the Experiencer, even the experience of void would not be possible. This Experiencer is the spanda principle.

14, 15 & 16. Spanda or the Divine principle appears in two aspects, subject and object. It is only the object that changes and disappears, never the Subject. Spanda constitutes the eternal subject.

17. The fully awakened yogi or suprabuddha has an integral experience of the Spanda principle in all the three states of waking, dream and deep sleep, but the partially awakened individual has an experience of it only in the beginning and end of waking, dream, and deep sleep, not in the middle of these states.

18. To the fully enlightened yogi, the spanda principle appears as knowledge (jñāna) and objects of knowledge (jñeya) in the middle of the two states of waking and dream, fully integrated to the I-consciousness just as they appear to Sadāśiva and Īśvara. In the deep sleep, since there is no object, the spanda principle appears as sheer consciousness (cinmaya).

19. There are two aspects of spanda-sāmānya and viśeṣa. Sāmānya is the general principle of consciousness, viśeṣa is the manifestation of Spanda in constitutive aspects like sattva, rajas and tamas or objective experiences like blue, pleasure etc. Ordinary people consider the viśeṣa spanda, i.e. the particular manifestations as something entirely different from consciousness, but the fully enlightened yogi considers them only as forms of Spanda.

20. The particular forms of spanda appear as entirely different from consciousness to all those who are not awakened to their divine source. So they are doomed to a life of worldly existence.

21. One should, therefore, have constant awareness of the spanda principle even in the common work-a-day world.

22. In intense emotional state or a state of mental impasse, all the mental activities come to a dead stop. That is the time when one can have an experience of the spanda principle if one is properly oriented towards it.

23, 24, 25. When the yogī lays his grip firmly on the spanda principle, his prāṇa and apāna get merged in the suṣumnā; they mount up to Brahma-randhra and finally get dissolved in the ether of consciousness beyond it.

Thus by means of twenty five verses the essential nature of spanda together with the means for attaining it has been described from various points of view.

II. SECTION

Sahaja Vidyodaya

The first section describes spanda principally as Śiva's dynamic aspect which is identical with the essential Self of each. In the first section, there is the stress on nimlana samādhi (introvertive meditation,) for the realization of the spanda principle.

The second section describes spanda not only as identical with the essential Self but also with the whole universe. In order to realize this aspect of spanda, (there is the stress on unmlana samādhi (extrovertive meditation). This is possible by the rise of Sahaja vidyā by which one experiences unity in the midst of diversity.

Verses 1 and 2 say that mantras whether taken in the sense of Mantra, Mantreśvara, and Mantramaheśvara or in the sense of sacred formulae derive their power from the spanda principle and are finally dissolved in it.

Verses 3 and 4 tell us that the individual through his knowledge of all objects feels his identity with all. Hence there is no state which is not Śiva to him.

Verse 5 tells us that one who has this realization views the entire world as the play of the Self identical with Śiva.

In verses 6 and 7, it is said that if one realizes his identity with the deity who is the object of his meditation, one becomes ultimately identified with Śiva and acquires immortality.

III. SECTION

Vibhūti Spanda

This section describes mostly the supernormal powers gained by the realization of spanda.

Verses 1 and 2 tell us that as Śiva fulfils the desires of the embodied yogī in the waking condition, so also does He reveal his desired objects even in dream by appearing in Suṣumnā.

Verse 3 tells us that if the yogī is not alert, he will have the same common experience in waking condition and particular, personal experiences in dream as other ordinary people of the world have.

Verses 4 and 5 say that if the self of the yogī becomes identified with the essential nature of Śiva, he is endowed with the power of knowing everything in its essential form.

Verse 6 says that such a yogī can acquire full control over his hunger.

Verse 7 says that he can also acquire the power of omniscience.

Verse 8. Depression proceeds from spiritual ignorance. Depression can no longer remain when ignorance disappears.

Verse 9 describes the rise of unmeṣa. It occurs at the junction-point of two thoughts. It is that metempirical Self that relates all thoughts and runs through all as the underlying subject.

Verse 10. From the realization of unmeṣa, one experiences supernormal light in the middle of the two eye-brows, unstruck, spontaneous sound in the sūṣumnā, rūpa i.e., a glow shining even in darkness and supernormal taste experienced on the tip of the tongue. They are, however, a disturbing factor in the realization of the Spanda principle.

11. When the yogī is established in the essential Self, he can experience all objective reality right from earth upto Śiva.

Verse 12. One who is identified with the essential Self perceives all phenomena only as the form of Śiva.

Verse 13. The empirical individual is deprived of the real spiritual power of will, knowledge and activity and coming under the suzerainty of powers derived from the multitude of words, he is reduced to the status of paśu—a limited, bound soul.

Verse 14. The bound soul loses his independence on account of the rise of ideas which have their sphere in sense-objects.

Verse 15. The empirical individual becomes bound on account of ideas, and ideas are due to the power of words. So words have a tremendous influence on the empirical individual.

Verse 16. The power of ideation and verbalization is derived from kriyā śakti. When the empirical individual realizes that the kriyā śakti is only an aspect of parāśakti or spanda, he is liberated.

Verse 17 & 18. All our motivated desires and ideas remain in the form of residual traces in the subtle body or puryaṣṭaka consisting of the five tanmātrās, manas, buddhi and ahaṅkāra. The transmigratory existence can be stopped only by the extermination of the impurities of the puryaṣṭaka.

Verse 19. When the empirical individual is firmly rooted in the spanda principle, he brings the emergence and dissolution of the puryaṣṭaka under his control and can become the lord of the entire group of śaktis.

IV SECTION

In this section, there are only two verses. The first one, by means of double entendre, lauds both the power of the spanda state and the power of the word of the guru.

The second one only points out the good that would accrue to all who carefully betake themselves to the spanda principle, and realize it.

TRANSLATION

She, who is ever conscious of the vitality of mantra,¹ who is the endless flash of the perfect and complete I-consciousness whose essence consists in a multitude of letters,² who is the goddess embodying *jñāna*³ (knowledge), ever knows the totality of categories from the earth upto Śiva, which is one in substance with Her own Self and is portrayed out of Her own nature on the canvas of Her own free, clear Self just as a city is reflected in a mirror (from which it is non-distinct). Hail to that Energy of creative pulsation (spandaśakti) of Śiva (Śāṃkari) that exults in glory all over the world.

Though the ambrosia of spanda has been relished in a small degree from my work Spandasandoha,⁴ I am now making an effort for providing complete enjoyment of that (spanda).

If you want to know the exact inter-connexion of the sūtras (i.e. of the kārikās or verses of this text), the most excellent ascertainment of the highest Reality, pointed and subtle statement of reasoning, the right application of means, exquisite exposition through clear sense and the secret doctrine of Śaivāgama, then, O intelligent people, apply your mind to this gloss of the Spandaśāstra and obtain the wealth of spanda.

NOTES

1. The mantra referred to is the I-consciousness or aham parāmarśa of the Absolute.

2. This I-consciousness or aham contains all the letters of the Sanskrit alphabet from 'a' (अ) to 'ha' (ह)

3. Dṛgdevī as the goddess embodying jñāna or knowledge.

Actually there is only one Śakti, viz., Svātantrya śakti, the Absolute Freedom of the Divine. The initial appearance of svātantrya is known as Ichhā-śakti or the power of Will. Its final appearance is known as Kriyā-śakti or the power of action. Its expansion is known as jñāna-śakti or power of knowledge. As Spandaśakti refers to the svātantrya or Freedom of Śiva in the form of the expansion of the universe, she is referred to as dṛgdevī. Dṛk means insight, vision, divine vision. Here it means jñāna. By the rule of Sandhi, dṛk has become dṛg.

4. Spandasandoha is the earlier work of Kṣemarāja in which he has expounded only the first verse of Spandakārikā at great length.

TRANSLATION

In this world, the excessive greatness of Self was revealed (unmilitamahimā) to the exalted preceptor Vasugupta by Śiva's inspiration who is intent on conferring His grace on all. He (Vasugupta) received instruction in dream and thus, in Mahādeva mountain, he obtained through divine will the most esoteric Śiva-sūtras which were engraved on the surface of the great rock. He, by demonstrating the agreement of revelation, experience and reasoning, put together the import of the sūtras in an abridged form by means of fifty-one verses which were deep in sense but were expressed in a lucid form.

TRANSLATION

In this book, the first twentyfive verses describe the spanda or creative pulsation which is the essential nature of Śiva (svarūpaspanda), the next seven refer to the spanda pertaining to the emergence of Sahaja-vidyā, the last nineteen give a glimpse of the spanda pertaining to supernormal powers (vibhūti). Thus this spanda-śāstra is arranged in three sections.

TRANSLATION

Now in the first section of the book, the first verse begins with the laudation of Śiva and suggests the main purport of the treatise. By the next four verses, the true nature of spanda is established with valid reasoning: next by two verses, the means for attaining it with proper recognition is described. The eighth verse refutes the objection raised against the means, the ninth one supports the means referred to by describing its perfect suitability for attaining the goal. The tenth verse shows the real nature of the goal which is attainable by that means. The eleventh verse says that by close adherence to that goal, the delusion of the world as a thing separate from Śiva ceases. The twelfth and thirteenth, by discarding the view of the Nihilists bring into prominence the striking difference of the Spanda-principle from their doctrine.

The fourteenth establishes the indestructibility of the spanda principle as such, though the world of objects brought about by it is subject to destruction. The fifteenth and sixteenth so thoroughly expound this idea that Nihilism stands completely eradicated. The seventeenth declares that while the fully awakened always has the realization of the spanda-principle, the partially awakened has it only in the initial and final stages (of waking, dream and dreamless sleep). The eighteenth describes the sphere of objects experienced by the fully awakened. Then the nineteenth hints at the means for the removal of the veils in the case of the fully awakened. The twentieth says how the real nature of Self is veiled in the case of the unawakened one. The twentyfirst exhorts that one should always exert oneself in acquiring the state of the fully awakened. The twenty-second declares that there are certain states of the individual in practical life which by bringing about the total cessation of all other states than that (spanda) provide the occasion for the realization of Spanda. The last three (23rd to 25th) verses urge that one who has experienced enlightenment in order to maintain the state of complete enlightenment, should be (always) on the alert in tearing asunder in a manner befitting a yogī the sleep-like veil of (spiritual) darkness. This is the sum and substance of the first section, beginning with 'Whose opening and shutting of the eye-lids, and ending with, 'The awakened one is unveiled.'

Now the purport of the book is being expounded.

TRANSLATION

Śaṅkara is one who does śaṃ (śaṃ karoti iti śaṅkaraḥ). By śaṃ is meant the grace (anugraha) which consists in enabling the aspirant to recognize the vast expanse of His (Śiva’s) Consciousness (sva-caitanya-sphāra) (which, in essence, is one’s own consciousness) which is non-dualistic and is the Highest Bliss inasmuch as it calms the heat of all the afflictions (of the aspirant). Such Śaṅkara who is our own essential nature do we laud. Here the sense of lauding is that by considering Him as excelling the entire cosmos we enter into His being by obliterating the state of assumed agency. (kalpita-pramāṭṛ-pada) brought about by Himself (tatkṛpta). This treatise is going to teach that entrance in Him i.e. identification with Him is the (real) reward of liberation in life, (jivan-mukti). The plural in stumaḥ (we laud) is meant to convey the idea of our identity with all those who are worthy of His grace and who are regarded by Him with favourable glance.

The word ‘tam’ (Him) fully establishes His uniqueness; which is suggested by the first half of the verse, viz., ‘By whose mere opening of the eye-lids, etc’.

Now the great lord who is the great God of the nature of Light, has absolute Freedom (svātantrya), of the nature of Parāśakti (the Highest Power) that displays Herself in the two poles of arāṇi (I) and visarga (creation or idam i.e. the objective world) and is always full of the flash of a compact mass of bliss and whose essence consists in Full I-consciousness which is the supreme import of the multitude of letters.¹

Therefore the Svātantrya Śakti (the Power of Absolute Freedom) of the Lord is called spanda. This power though non-distinct from the Lord goes on presenting the entire cycle of manifestation and withdrawal on its own background like the reflection of a city in a mirror. It will be shown by apt arguments further (in the book) that though she is not anything extra (anadhikamāpi) she goes on showing herself as if supernumerary (adhikamiva). This śakti of the lord who is non-moving, being of the nature of consciousness (Citsvābhāvvyād acalasyāpi bhagavataḥ) is known as spanda in accordance with the rootmeaning of the word signifying slight movement (kiñcit calattā)². Thus the essential nature of the Lord is perpetual spanda (creative pulsation). He is never without spanda. Some³ hold that the Highest Reality is without any activity whatsoever. But in such a case the Highest Reality being devoid of activity, all this (i.e. the universe) will be without a lord or Creative Power. The great teacher has written this śāstra (sacred book) in order to explain the fact that our nature is identical with that of Śaṅkara who is full of spanda śakti, the essence of which consists in quivering light. Thus this śāstra has been appropriately named spanda.

This will be made clear later.

This spanda-śakti consists of the compact bliss of I-consciousness which holds in its bosom endless cycles of creation and dissolution, which is of the nature of the entire world of the pure and the impure, which is of the nature of exhibiting limitation and expansion of Subjects and Objects, which is worthy of adoration of all esoteric knowledge, which is simultaneously of the nature of emanation and absorption.

The same principle constitutes the stage of absorption (nimeśa)⁴ from the point of view of the withdrawal of the previously manifested aggregate of categories from Śiva down to the earth and from the point of view of those that are about to come into being, it is, in its aspect of manifestation, the stage of appearance or expansion (unmeṣa). Thus the stage of the submergence (nimeṣa) of the universe constitutes the emergence (unmeṣa) of the compactness of consciousness, so also the stage of the submergence of the compactness of consciousness constitutes the stage of the emergence of the universe. As the traditional scripture puts it.

“The goddess (i.e., the creative power) is always engaged in exercising her energy in manifestation (lit., in enjoying the taste of manifestation), and yet always appears as replete (i.e. her energy is never depleted). She is the wave of the ocean of consciousness, the volitional power of the LORD.”

The glorious great Lord by His power of absolute Freedom assuming the Subjective roles of Śiva, Mantramaheśvara, Mantrēśvara, Mantra, Vijñānakala, Pralayākala, and Sakala and the the role of sphere of objects appropriate for each subject, in the process of gradual descent, displays by way of the play of concealing His inner nature, the succeeding aspects by suppressing the preceding ones, though they serve as the substratum for the succeeding aspects. In the gradual process of ascent He displays the preceding aspects by eliminating the succeeding ones in the case of Jñāna-yogīs (the gnostic yogīs). Thus He shows the succeeding ones in a developed form in the preceding⁴ ones by making them give up their limitation, and the preceding ones in a limited form by suppressing their higher state (in the order of descent). So He shows everything as of the nature of everything else. The usual perception of difference is due only to limitation caused to appear by Him. The teaching of this śāstra is meant to destroy this perception of difference. Enough of this expatiation.

The goddess Consciousness is simultaneously of the nature of display (unmeṣa) and suppression (nimeṣa). Even while she displays external perception like blue or internal perception like pleasure, she suppresses the (real) nature of her identity with the perceiver and also brings about the suppression of yellow etc. which was previously perceived. In order to put an end to transmigratory existence, let people of great intelligence closely understand the goddess Consciousness (pratibhā)⁵ who is simultaneously of the nature of both revelation (unmeṣa) and concealment (nimeṣa) as is evident from one's own experience. That is why the exalted Kallaṭa in his gloss explained unmeṣa and nimeṣa together (not separately) by one word, viz., “by the power of mere will.”

The writer⁶ who prepared this conspectus also says in the following verse that the cessation of the previous idea which is the cause of the rise of the next is said to be unmeṣa, for without the cessation of the previous idea, the rise of the next one is impossible.

“That is to be known as Unmeṣa whence another thought arises in one who is already occupied with one thought. One can observe this for oneself. This will be explained at length in its proper place.

In the following verse also, the real implication of the rise of thought-constructs is the simultaneous disappearance of the bliss of immortality. This will be elucidated later. “Of the limited empirical being, the rise of the empirical thought-constructs (pratyayodbhavaḥ) betokens at the same time the disappearance of the bliss of Supreme immortality. By that i.e. the rise of empirical thought-constructs), the empirical being loses his independence. The rise of the empirical concepts brings about only the experience of the sphere of the tanmātras (i.e. of sound, form and colour, taste, smell and touch).”

In the following line also,

“When the agitation ceases, then is the highest state experienced,” it will be clarified that nimeṣa (disappearance) in the form of the cessation of agitation implies at the same time unmeṣa (appearance) of the Supreme state.

Hence the same Power which is of double aspect is sometimes employed predominantly in the aspect of unmeṣa (appearance) and sometimes predominantly in the aspect of nimeṣa (disappearance).

Thus the first half of the verse should be interpreted in the following manner.

“Whose Śakti (divine power) predominant in displaying creation, kāryonmeṣa-pradhānāyāḥ) instinct with the concealment (nimeṣa) of His (Śiva's) essential nature, (svarūpanimeṣātmanaḥ) is the cause of the manifestation of the universe i.e. the manifestation from Śiva down to earth consisting of diversity which has a wealth of manifold distinctions and which submerges the essential unity (of the Divine). The same Śakti (divine power), predominant in submerging externality (bāhyatānimeṣapradhānāyāḥ) and instinct with the revelation (unmeṣa) of His (Śiva's) essential nature brings about the dissolution of the universe which consists in the emergence of unity and submergence of multi-faceted diversity'. Thus the interpretation of the text should point out the fact that submergence (from one point of view) is also emergence (from another point of view), and similarly emergence (from one point of view) is also submergence (from another point of view). In reality, however, nothing arises and nothing subsides. We shall show that it is only the divine spandaśakti (the divine creative pulsation) which, though free of succession, appears in different aspects as if flashing in view and as if subsiding. Sthiti (maintenance of the world-process) Vilaya (concealment of the essential nature) and amugraha (grace) are not anything other than particular forms of absorption and manifestation, therefore the five-fold divine acts have been included only in pralaya (absorption) and udaya (manifestation). This point has been conclusively discussed by me in this very way in my gloss on the first sūtra only in Spanda-sandoha.

An objection may be raised here. "From the point of view of Mahānaya Śāstra' the different acts of absorption and manifestation of the universe are brought about by the goddesses Śṛṣṭi etc., then how is it that in this text it has been said (in singular number) He whose etc.? In order to clear this doubt, the verse says, "Him who is the source of the glorious powers of the group of the śaktis."

(First interpretation of Śakticakra—vibhava-prabhava)

By śakti-cakra is meant the aggregate of twelve⁸ divinities such as Śṛṣṭi, Rakta, etc. By its vibhava is meant the play of that aggregate in the form of creative activity (udyoga), maintenance (avabhāsana), absorption (carvaṇa), and assumption of indefinable state (anākhyā), by prabhava is meant cause. So the whole phrase Śakti-cakra-Vibhava-prabhavam means the cause of the creative activity, etc. of the twelve divinities, such as Śṛṣṭi, Rakta, etc.

These divinities embracing the exalted *Manthān-Bhairava*⁹ who is the lord of the aggregate (of these divinities) bring about the play of the manifestation etc. of the universe. This is what the sacred tradition (āmnāya) says.

A doubt may arise viz.,

Wherefore does the Lord become the cause of the manifestation, withdrawal etc. of the universe? Its solution is contained in the following (Second interpretation of Śakti-cakra-vibhava-prabhavam)

The objective world exists only as being manifest (prakāśamānatvena) and being manifest means that it is of the nature of prakāśa or Light which is Consciousness. It has been said by the wise (Utpaladeva): “The entire gamut of entities appears (outside), because it already exists in the Lord’s Self. Without its existing in Him there would be no desire for manifestation.” (I.P.V I.5. 10). Śakti-cakra is described as the aggregate of powers, because it (already) exists as identical with the internal Light of the Supreme. It is because of this that in the revealed Scriptures it is proclaimed that the Supreme has infinite powers, Prabhava means cause, Vibhava means the infinite variety of junction and disjunction of the group of Śaktis whose highest raison d’etre consists in manifestation. So, Śakti-cakra-vibhava-prabhavam means the cause of the infinite variety of junction and disjunction of the aggregate of powers (Śaktis) Thus the Lord by mutually joining and disjoining in various ways all the objective phenomena which are of the nature of consciousness and exist in Him as identical with Him is the cause of the manifestation and absorption of the universe. The same thing has been said by exalted, Kallaṭa.

“(Who is) the cause of the appearance of the glorious powers of the aggregate of the śaktis which powers are of the nature of consciousness,”. The two interpretations given by me are in conformity with the wording of his gloss.

(Third interpretation of Śakti-cakra)

Also according to the standpoint of revealed traditional scripture (āgama dṛṣṭyā) which avers “His powers constitute the whole world, “and also from the standpoint of this book itself (ihatya sthityā) which maintains that” whether in matter of word, or object or thought, there is no state which is not Śiva,” the group of śaktis represents the world.

(Fourth interpretation of Śakti Cakra)

According to the esoteric teaching, viz., "The void that exists in the upper course of khecari is the sphere of Vāmeśi," the phrase also implies the group of such śaktis as Vāmeśvari,¹⁰ Khecari, Gocari, Dikcari and Bhūcari which has been thoroughly explained by me in Spanda-sandoha, and which will be decisively pointed out in this book also in such a statement as, "They are intent on concealing their real nature to unawakened beings."

So as described in these two explanations, 'Śakti-cakra' here means the group of manifold śaktis (Śakti-cakra-prapañca-bhūta).

(Fifth interpretation of Śakti-Cakra)

According to 'whence the group of senses', Śakti means 'the multitude of senses.'

(Sixth interpretation)

According to 'Relying on that strength, the mantras', śakti means 'the eternal *mantras*¹¹ (nitya mantra)'

(Seventh interpretation)

According to 'of the group of powers arising from the multitude of words', śakti stands for the 'nature of the deities like Brāhmī¹² etc.'

In these ways, I have given in detail many decisive interpretations of Śakti cakra in Spanda-Sandoha. The word prabhava means 'one who is Free' (in accordance with the root-meaning prabhavati i.e, one who prevails, one who is powerful), and not dependent on others like the animals.

(Another interpretation of Śakti-cakra-vibhava-prabhava):

This may be interpreted as a Bahuvrīhi compound, meaning 'One whose prabhava i.e. udaya or appearance or manifestation (abhivyakti) comes about from the vibhava i.e. the inner unfoldment of the mass of light i.e, the divinities of the senses (*raśmi-puñja*¹³) (i.e. Śaṅkara who is manifested by an inner development of the senses). The sense is that the recognition of the highest Lord is brought about effortlessly by the practice of perception of the inner nature.

(Another interpretation of the whole verse):

Moreover, we laud that Śaṅkara who is a mass of consciousness identical with the Self) cidānandaghanasyātmanaḥ) and by whose opening of the eye lids and closing them i.e. by whose revelation and veiling of His essential nature there ensue according to the view that what is within is also without the disappearance and appearance, in other words the submergence and emergence successively (yathāsaṅkhyam) of the world i.e. the body and through its association of the external universe also, and who to His devotee), is the revealer (prabhava-prakāśaka) of the nature (etat svarūpa) of the Śakticakravibhava i.e. of the glory of the greatness of the divinity in the form of the highest consciousness.

So far as possible the verse may be construed in this way also. We laud Śaṅkara who is the cause of the greatness of goddess Consciousness identical with unmeṣa and nimeṣa in bringing about the manifestation etc. of the universe, that Śaṅkara who is the Self, and by whose unmeṣa i.e. expansion in the form of externality there is the manifestation of the world, and by whose nimeṣa i.e. withdrawal in the form of internality, there is the disappearance of the world. The Highest Lord even by entering the body etc. brings about the manifestation and disappearance of the world by the opening and closing of the senses. This has been described in the following lines by Utpaladeva who knew the essence of the esoteric doctrine.

“Therefore, even in practical life, the Lord, because of His free will in the form of Māyā Śakti enters the body, and by His will manifests externally the multitude of objects which shine within Him.”
(I,P.I,6,7)

In order that people may take the sense (of the verse) in the above way, the teacher has rejected the use of “By whose power of Absolute Freedom,” and adopted that of “By whose revelation and veiling.”

Herein the laudation of Śaṅkara implies samāveśa or penetration in Him. As this is what is to be obtained, it is both the subject-matter and the goal. By taking the phrase Śakti-cakravibhava-prabhavam as a Bahuvrihi compound and interpreting it in the sense “Whose manifestation is due to the inner unfoldment of the group of śaktis”, the unfoldment of the group of śaktis has been said to be the means for the attainment of the goal. By taking the same phrase as a Tatpuruṣa compound and interpreting it as “the revealer of the glory of the goddess of the Highest Consciousness” to the devotees, the fruit has been referred to. As the author¹⁴ (of the book) will say (later). “Then he will become the lord of the group of śaktis”. Hence the connexion of the subject-matter (of the book) and the means (upāya) is that of the end (upeya) and means (upāya). Thus this Sūtra (Kārikā) gives briefly the subject-matter, the means, the connexion of the two and the fruit of the study of this subject.”

NOTES

1. ‘Aham’ which in Sanskrit is the word for ‘I’ consists of all the letters of the Sanskrit alphabet from ‘a’ to ‘ha’.

2. The root-meaning of the word ‘spanda’ is ‘having slight movement.’ The Lord is acala, non-moving. Therefore, movement cannot be ascribed to Him. The word ‘spanda’ in the case of the Lord i.e. Śiva has to be taken in a figurative sense of creative pulsation, divine activity, throbbing with life, dynamism.

3. The Vedantists who maintain that Brahman is sheer calm Consciousness without any activity.

4. The teacher referred to is Vasugupta who, according to Kṣemarāja, composed the Spandakārikā.

5. ‘Pratibhā’ is parā samvit, the highest Divine Consciousness which holds within itself all sound, letters, etc. and the endless variety of subject and object as identical with itself.

6. This refers to Vasugupta

7. ‘Mahārtha’ which is also known as ‘Mahānaya’ system refers to the Krama school which arose in Kashmir towards the close of the 7th and beginning of the 8th century A.D.

8. These twelve divinities or Kālīs are a special feature of the ‘Mahārtha or ‘Krama’ system. They are:

(i) Sṛṣṭi: when the will to create or manifest arises in Kālī and the would-be creation shines in outline in her, she is known as Sṛṣṭi Kālī. This is the conception of creative power in relation to the object (prameya).

(ii) Rakta Kālī is the conception of the power of maintenance (sthiti) of the objective world through the five senses.

(iii) Sthitināśa Kālī. This is the conception of the power of saṃhāra or withdrawal of the objective world i.e. when her extrovert form is terminated and she rests within herself.

(iv) Yama Kālī manifests herself as beyond the extrovert and the introvert aspect. She represents the anākhyā or indefinable power in relation to objective experience.

The first four represent the four powers (śṛṣṭi, sthiti, saṃhāra and anākhyā) in relation to object (prameya).

(v) Samhāra Kālī. When Parāsaṃvid brings about the disappearance of the externality of objects as related to pramāṇas or means of knowledge and grasps them within as identical with herself, she is known as Samhāra kālī. This is śṛṣṭi in the stage of pramāṇa. In the stage of Śthitināśakālī, the experience is "I have known the object." In the stage of Samhārakālī, the experience is, "The object is non-different from me."

(vi) Mṛtyukālī engulfs even the Samhāra Kālī; she swallows up even the residual traces of the idea of the withdrawal of the objective world. This is sthiti in the stage of pramāṇa.

(vii) Bhadrakālī. The letter bha in Bhadrakālī indicates bhedana or afflorescence of different objects and the letter dra indicates drāvaṇa or dissolving those different forms again in her essential nature. This is the aspect of saṃhāra in the stage of pramāṇa. She is also called Rudrakālī.

(viii) Mārtaṇḍa Kālī. Mārtaṇḍa means 'sun.' The group of twelve indriyas is referred to as 'sun' inasmuch as it illumines or brings to light the objects like the 'sun'. The twelve indriyas are the five senses of perception, the five organs of action, manas and buddhi. All the indriyas function only when related to ahaṃkāra or the 'ego feeling'. 'Mārtaṇḍa Kālī' is so called because she brings about the dissolution of the twelve senses in the Ego-feeling. She represents the anākhyā power in relation to pramāṇa, because it brings the dissolution of the twelve senses in the ego-feeling to such an extent that they become un-namable.

The four stages 5 to 8 represent the four powers of kālī in relation to means of knowledge (pramāṇa).

The next four stages of kālī represent her four powers in relation to the limited Subject (pramātā).

(ix) Paramārkakālī. She represents her power of śṛṣṭi in relation to the limited subject. She brings about the emergence of the limited subject by merging Ahaṃkāra, the previously described ego-feeling in her creative power. It should be borne in mind that the limited subject in this context does not mean the common limited subject. This limited subject is one in whom the limitations of objects and senses have been obliterated but who still retains the limitation of paśu or āṇava mala.

(x) Kālāgnirudrakālī. When Parāsaṃvid brings about the identification of the limited subject with the Universal Self, she is known as Kālāgnirudrakālī. This Kālī represents the power of maintenance (sthiti) in relation to the limited subject as she makes the limited subject rest in the Universal Self.

She is called Kālāgnirudrakālī, because she dissolves the limited subject Kālāgnirudra in Her Universal self.

The experience at the level of Kālāgnirudrakālī is "I am all this". She is also known as Mahākālī, because she holds within Herself everything including Kāla or Time.

(xi) Mahākālākālī. She brings about the dissolution of the 'I' which is posited in opposition to this in the 'perfect I' which is free from all relation to objectivity. This represents the power of saṃhāra or withdrawal in relation to the limited subject.

(xii) Mahābhairava-ghora-caṇḍakālī or Mahābhairavacaṇḍograghorakālī.

This represents the state of anākhyā in relation to the limited subject. This refers to that state of Parāsaṃvid which transcends all description in words. Hence it is the stage of anākhyā. This is the Akula stage. In it the subject, the object, the means of knowledge and knowledge (pramātā, pramāṇa and prameya) are all dissolved in I-consciousness. This is also called Parā or the Highest, because all the previous states are Her manifestation.

As she dissolves all the states of prameya (object), pramāṇa (means of knowledge and knowledge), and pramātā (subject), she is called Mahābhairava ghora-caṇḍakālī. The word caṇḍa refers to the sphere of prameya (object), ghora implies pramāṇa (knowledge and means of knowledge), and mahābhairava suggests pramātā (subject).

9. Manthāna Bhairava is the ultimate resting place of all and is also called Kuleśvara by Maheśvarānanda.

10. Vāmeśvarī is the presiding deity of the whole group of these Śaktis. The word vāma is connected with the verb vam which means to spit out, emit, eject. The Śakti is called Vāmeśvarī, because she emits or projects the universe out of the Absolute. The word vāma also means left, reverse, contrary, opposite. This Śakti is called Vāmeśvarī also because while in the Śiva-state there is unity-consciousness, in the state of samsāra, the contrary or opposite condition happens, viz. there is difference-consciousness.

Khecari—Khecari śaktis are explained by Kṣemarāja in the following way in Spandasandoha (p. 20) The bodhagagane caranti iti khecaryaḥ pramātrbhūmisthitāḥ Khecaris are those śaktis that move (caranti) in Kha i.e. consciousness (bodhagagana).

These reside in the pramātā or the subject, the experient. They lead those experients who have become purified to liberation, to the Divine, and bind those who are under the influence of Māyā.

Gocari. The word go symbolizes buddhi-ahaṅkāramanobhūmi i.e. antaḥkaraṇa. Antaḥkaraṇa or the psychic apparatus is the sphere of gocari śaktis.

Dikcari—Dikṣu diśāsu bāhyabhūmiṣu caranti iti dikcaryaḥ. Those śaktis that function in dik or outer space are known as dikcari. The external senses have to do with the consciousness of space. Hence they are the sphere of dikcari śaktis.

Bhūcari—Bhūḥ rūpādi pancātmakam meypadaṃ tatra caranti iti bhūcaryaḥ. Those śaktis that have to do with the external objects, with the objective phenomena having colour, form, etc. are known as bhūcari.

The empirical individual experients, their psychic apparatus, their organs of sense and action, and the objective world are the expressions of these śaktis.

11. Nityamantra or the eternal mantra is the mantra of pūrṇāhantā, the ever-present perfect I-consciousness of the Divine.

12. The presiding deities of the multitude of words are the following:

(1.) Yogīśvarī or Mahālakṣmī of a-varga i.e. of the class of vowels.

(2) Brāhmī of ka-varga, (3) Maheśvari of ca-varga, (4) Kaumārī of ṭa-varga, (5) Vaiṣṇavī of ta-varga, (6) vārāhī of pa-varga (7) Aindrī or Indrāṇī of ya-varga, (8) Cāmuṇḍā of śa-varga.

13. Raśmi-puñja. 'Mass of light' here means the Karaṇeśvari devīs i.e. the divinities of the senses. The senses when extroverted are known as indriyas, when introverted and resting in the self, they are known as Karaṇeśvari devīs

14. This refers to Vasugupta who, according to Kṣemarāja, is the author of Spandakārikā.

EXPOSITION

The Sanskrit words unmeṣa and nimeṣa are very rich in connotation. They cannot be expressed in one word in any other language. So they have been translated by different words in different contexts.

The first question to be considered is that this entire text of Spandakārikā is meant to prove that Śiva is changeless and one. How then two aspects of His, viz. unmeṣa and nimeṣa (appearance-disappearance, manifestation-absorption) which are mutually contradictory have been mentioned in the first verse?

The answer is that it is only Svātantrya—Freedom or Ichhā Will i.e. of Śiva which brings about both manifestation and absorption. Unmeṣa and nimeṣa denote succession. Succession means Time, but Śiva is above Time. Therefore, unmeṣa and nimeṣa have not to be taken in the order of succession. They are simply two expressions of Ichhā śakti of the Divine. In Spandasandoha, Kṣemarāja says that there are many names of this Ichhā Śakti (power of will) in this system. Spanda, sphurattā Ūrmi, Bala, Udyoga, Hṛdaya, sāra, Mālinī, Parā etc. are synonyms of this Ichhā śakti. In Spanda-nirṇaya also he says : It is only spanda-śakti which is simultaneously unmeṣa and nimeṣa.

Both unmeṣa and nimeṣa, i.e. manifestation and absorption simultaneously denote the Ichhā of the Divine. They are not two mutually opposed principles. What from one point of view is nimeṣa is at the same time unmeṣa from another point of view. For instance, the disappearance (nimeṣa) of the world i.e. the disappearance of the idea that the world is something different toto caelo from Śiva set over against Him as another constitutes at the same time the unmeṣa or appearance of the essential nature of Śiva. Similarly, the nimeṣa or the concealment of the essential nature of Śiva is at the time the unmeṣa or appearance of the world as something different from Śiva. Kṣemarāja gives many examples in his commentary to show that what is unmeṣa from one point of view is simultaneously (yugapat) nimeṣa from another point of view and vice versa. He concludes by saying:

वस्तुतस्तु न किञ्चदुदेति व्ययते वा केवलं स्पन्दशक्तिरेव भगवत्यक्रमापि तथा
तथा भासरूपतया स्फुरन्त्युदेतीव व्ययत इव च ।

“In reality nothing arises, and nothing subsides, only the divine Spanda-śakti which, though free of succession, appears in different aspects as if arising, and as if subsiding.”

Kṣemarāja has pointed out that nimeṣa and unmeṣa refer to another significant concept of Śaiva philosophy. This is a philosophy of Evolution. Evolution has two aspects—the arc of descent or avarohakrama (nimeṣa) from the Divine upto the empirical individual, from Consciousness upto the matter and the arc of ascent or āroha-krama (unmeṣa) from the empirical individual upto Śiva-pramātā and from inconscient matter upto saṁvid or the divine consciousness. The purpose of all the scriptures including Spandakārikā is to show how the empirical individual can mount to the stage of Śiva-pramātā. Śiva-consciousness is the upeya or the goal, the methods recommended in the book are the means (upāyas) for reaching the goal (upeya).

Kṣemarāja has given many interpretations of Śakti-cakra-vibhava-prabhava from various points of view in his commentary which should be carefully studied.

Both Rāmakaṇṭha and Utpala Bhaṭṭa warn that pralaya and udaya are not to be taken as corresponding to unmeṣa and nimeṣa exactly in the order in which they are given in the text but rather in a different order i.e. udaya with unmeṣa, and pralaya with nimeṣa. “When there is the unmeṣa i.e. aunmukhya or inclination towards manifestation, there is the udaya or emergence of the world. When there is nimeṣa or retraction of that inclination, there is submergence of the world.”

Kṣemarāja takes pralaya and udaya both ways i.e. in a different order (bhinnakrama) as advocated by Rāmakaṇṭha and Utpalabhaṭṭa, and also in the order as they appear in the text.

When taken in a different order, the meaning would be as given above. When taken in the order in which they appear in the text, the meaning would be as given below:

“When there is unmeṣa or revelation of the essential nature of the Divine, there is the pralaya or disappearance of the world. When there is nimeṣa or concealment of the essential nature of the Divine, there is the udaya or appearance of the world.”

Both these interpretations are correct. In the first interpretation, the words unmeṣa and nimeṣa are construed with reference to Śakti of Śiva. In the second interpretation, they are construed with reference to the svurūpa or essential nature of Śiva.

The text is neither a book of poetry, nor of mere academic philosophy. It is philosophy for the practical purpose of sanctifying and divinising human nature. What then is the justification of śaṅkaraṃ stumaḥ—we laud Śaṅkara? All the commentators are unanimously of the view that stumaḥ here suggests samāviśāmaḥ i.e. ‘we have to enter or identify ourselves with His essential nature’. As Kṣemarāja puts it beautifully Kalpitapramātrpada-nimajjanena samāviśāmaḥ, tatsamāveśa eva hi jivanmuktiphala iha prakaraṇa upadeśyaḥ. “We are united with Him by obliterating our state of assumed agency. This treatise is going to teach that identification with Him is the real reward of liberation in life.”

Here a doubt may be raised. What is the proof of the existence of such real nature as Śaṅkara? How can He create the world without any means such as material etc.? If He Himself is assumed to be the material cause, then His disappearance would be brought about by the world (after creation,) just as the disappearance of a lump of clay is brought about after the production of a jar.

If it be said that there can be both appearance and disappearance of the Lord, then this would give rise to difference in His nature, and also some cause has to be thought out for His re-emergence after disappearance, and on the creation of the world, there would be the contingency of duality. To remove all such doubts with one stroke, the author says:

Inasmuch as nothing can veil His nature, there cannot be His obstruction anywhere in whom all this world rests and from whom it has come forth ?

Translation of the Commentary

Of that i.e. of Śaṅkara who is a compact mass of Light and Bliss and who is everyone's own being, there is no where i.e. in no space, time or form any obstruction i.e. any impediment in His free advance, because nothing can veil His nature. This is the purport. In this world, whatever, e.g. prāṇa (life-force), puryaṣṭaka (the subtle body)' pleasure, the blue colour, etc. that may possibly be conceived to have the capacity of veiling the Light of Consciousness is nothing if it does not come into light (na prakāśate) and if it does come into light (prakāśamānaṃ tu), then it is only the nature of Śaṅkara whose very form is Light (of Consciousness). Then what is that which can obstruct or what is the meaning of obstruction? The author proves this very fact by adding the qualifying clause 'in whom all this objective world rests'¹ (yatra ityādinā) etc. to the noun clause 'His obstruction is nowhere possible etc.' (tasya na nirodho' sti kutracit etc.)

Yatra means 'in that consciousness which is one's own Self'. Idaṃ sarvaṃ kāryam means 'the entire world consisting of subject or knower (mātṛ), means of knowledge or knowledge (māna), and object or the known (meva)'.

Yatra sthitam idaṃ sarvaṃ kāryam, therefore, means, 'In which Consciousness this world consisting of subject, object and means of knowledge etc. rests'. By 'rests' (sthitam) is meant by whose light, it comes into light and thus obtains stance. How can there be an obstruction of His by that world? Because by His obstruction that which is considered the obstructor itself can by no means appear. This is what is to be supplied to complete the sense. As has been said in Ajaḍapramāṭṛsiddhi (21). "How can there be any restraint of His by prāṇa (life-force) which is identical with Himself?"

(An objection). A question may be raised—"That alone can have the light of stance which is produced, but to what does it owe its very production"? In reply, it is said, 'From whom it has come forth.' Discarding the Consciousness as the cause of the world which is verified from one's own experience from the standpoint of memory, dream, ideation, creation by yogis, it is not proper to suppose pradhāna, atom etc. to be the cause of the world, for such a cause has neither proof nor reasoning in its support.

By the word kārya (effect, product), this is what is implied, "That is said to be a product which is produced by the action of an agent, not that which is the outcome of another insentient cause. According to what has been said in Īśvarapratyabhijñā, causality in the case of the insentient cannot be proved. This will be made clear in the following line in this book. "The pair of states is said to be the doer and the deed. (I, 14)." The word 'all' (sarvam) in the verse implies that the agent is independent of material, etc. It is never witnessed that the produced product such as the jar can conceal the nature of the agent such as the potter, etc.

(Another objection). The process of coming out can occur only in the case of that which is already contained in something. Then is this world contained in something in the very beginning?

(Reply) No, it is not contained in anything else, but in the self-same Consciousness. That is why it is said in the verse, "in whom it rests". The phrase, 'in whom it rests' should be used twice by repetition. This is the sense "If the world did not exist in Consciousness, undifferentiated from the light of I-ness, how could it arise from it without the need of material, etc? Since according to the sacred tradition as expressed in the following lines:

"As the great banyan tree lies only in the form of potency in the seed, even so the entire universe with all the mobile and immobile beings lies as a potency in the heart-seed¹ of the Supreme," (P. Tri 24) and according to the reasoning aforementioned in "Because it already exists in the Lord's Self." (I.P.I. 5,10), this world already rests in Him, gleaming as identical with Him. Therefore, it is perfectly valid to say that the Lord whose nature is consciousness brings about the emergence of the world in the form of congealment of His essence (i.e., He materializes His essence in the form of the world).

Thus the syntactical construction must be made differently. The particle 'ca' should be interpreted in the sense of eva (एव) and should be put in a different order. So now the line would stand as Yatra sthitam eva (yad) idam sarvaṃ kāryam yasmād nirgatam, meaning 'only as resting in Him is all this world come forth.'

(A third objection) "Well, if this world has come out (i.e. separated) from that Exquisite Mass of Light, then how can it be manifest, for nothing can be manifest outside Light? It would be inconsistent to say that something is separate from Light and is yet manifest.

(Reply). To answer this question, the clause 'from whom it has come forth' should also be repeated twice and should be construed in this way, Yasmād nirgatamapi (sad) yatra sthitam, i.e. from whom even when it has come forth, it is still resting there. The particle 'ca' has to be taken in a different order and has to be interpreted as meaning 'even' 'This is what is meant to be said—"That (the world) has not come out from him as does a walnut from a bag. Rather the self-same Lord through His absolute Freedom manifesting, on His own background like a city in a mirror, the world as if different from Him though non-different, abides in Himself."

(Fourth objection). Well, it may be granted that there is no obstruction to Him by the world in the states of manifestation (creation) and maintenance, how can He avoid being concealed in the state of the world's dissolution which is of the nature of naught, akin to sound sleep? Without the perceptible world, the perceiver, viz., the perceiving consciousness is nothing (i.e. a subject without an object is meaningless.)

(Reply). The question can be answered by a repetition of the clause yasmāt nirgatam api sad yatraiva sthitam i.e. from whom even while come forth it abides in Him i.e. even the created world in the state of dissolution abides in Him as identical with Himself. There is no other annihilation of it in the form of a void. In accordance with what is said in the verse given below, the void cannot be reasonably conceived without Light serving as its support. As has been said in Svacchandaśāstra "It is (really) nonvoid (aśūnyam) which is said to be void (śūnyam), for śūnya only means abhāva or absence of objects. O goddess, that is to be known as abhāva (absence of objects) in which all objective existents have dissolved.”

Therefore nothing whether space, time or form can be said with propriety to obstruct Him whose work is this whole world, by whose Light it is manifested, and even when dissolved it abides as identical with that Light.

Hence this principle is all-pervading, eternal, full of all powers, self-luminous, and eternally existent. In order to prove its existence, no poor means of proof which can reveal only an unknown thing can ever be appropriately applicable or possible. On the contrary, the means of proof and all other things themselves depend on the truth of this principle. This has been said by my venerable teacher in Tantrāloka:

“He the great God is the utmost life of even those proofs which constitute the life of all things.” (T.I. 55)

The phrase Yatra sthitam (in whom it rests) should be applied twice by repetition, and so the whole thing would mean “This world even when it comes out from Him rests in Him, by whose light, it being manifest rests in Him as that light itself, with whose light it is identical, whose light alone considered in its entirety is sufficient for its (the world’s) proof.” The world is nothing else than this principle.

Thus there can never and nowhere be any obstruction, as is proved by one’s own experience, to this Spanda principle which reveals that where manifestation, maintenance and withdrawal all meet and which brings about things most difficult to be accomplished. As has been said by Utpaladeva:

“O Ruler of all, glory to thy unprecedented rulership which has indeed nothing to be ruled (for there is nothing different from thyself over which thou couldst rule). Thy other rulership (in the form of Sadāśiva, Īśvara) is also exactly like thy own by which this world does not appear to thy devotees in the same way as it appears to others” (Utpala stotra XVI, 301). The sense of this verse is that nothing appears as different from the Light of manifestation, since the manifest world is one with the Light of manifestation.

(Means for mystic Union):

Moreover, since there is no obstruction to this (spanda) principle whether in the state of cessation as indicated by the phrase Yatra sthitam (in whom resting) or in the state of expansion as indicated by the phrase Yasmāc ca nirgatam (from whom came forth), therefore the yogī should be intent on entrance in his essential nature in both nimilana and unmilana samādhi.² As will be said (in this book). “When agitation ceases, then occurs the highest state³ (I,9) Similarly, “Whether it is a word or object or thought, there is no state which is not Śiva.⁴” (II, 4). There cannot be an obstruction to or negation of one’s real nature in any case even though there may be existing somewhere an experient like the Buddhist who maintains that there is no Self or there may be somewhere a proof which is considered to be its annulment. Because if he that is the denier of that (essential nature) is not (already) existent as a reality, then his denial becomes a picture without a canvas. Similarly, the proof which is its negation also becomes groundless without the existence of the denier. This in itself is the proof of the reality of the spanda tattva that it is manifest (prakāśate iti) in the form of that very denier. The reality of the experient (pramātā) which is thus proved goes to show that the Lord who is an eternally established reality (ādi-siddha)⁵ and who is identical with the reality of one’s own Self does exist. Thus the reality of the Spanda principle has been tacitly affirmed without using any words, even by him who had come forward to deny it. This point will be clarified later in this book in “There can be no disappearance of that inner nature.” (I, 16).

Thus this book describes the fact that the principle of Śaṅkara which is both transcendent to and immanent in the world, which brings about manifestation, maintenance and withdrawal of the world is one’s own essential nature. That which is the object of meditation in all the theistic schools is not anything different from the spanda principle. The diversity of meditation appears entirely owing to the absolute Freedom of this Spanda principle. In fact, the entire universe is only the manifestation of the essence of the activity of this principle. This has been explained by way of suggestion in the line. “By relying on that strength, the mantras become endowed with the strength of the omniscient” (II,1).

Thus there is no room for the aforesaid objection. Let intelligent people who are unprejudiced and are not haughty examine for themselves the difference between my commentary and the commentaries of others on the Spandakārikās which are like desire-granting gem. I have not openly shown that difference in the case of every word for fear of the increase of the volume of the book.

NOTES

1. Hṛdaya-bija (heart-seed) is also known as Samhāra-bija symbolized by the mantra Sauḥ or ma-ha-a. Sṛṣṭibija is ahām. It is also known as piṇḍanātha-bija, symbolized by the mantra 'r-kṣ-kh-em.'

2. Nimilana and unmilana samādhi; Nimilana samādhi is the inward meditative condition with closed eyes, in which the individual consciousness gets absorbed into the Universal Consciousness. Unmilana samādhi is that state of the mind in which, even when the eyes are open, the external world appears as Universal Consciousness or Śiva.

3. This refers to the state of nimilana samādhi.

4. This refers to the state of unmilana samādhi.

5. Ādi-siddha means that it is an eternally established reality, it already stands proved before any denial or negation tries to disprove it.

EXPOSITION

This kārikā expresses the fact that the world consisting of pramātā (subject), prameya (object) and pramāṇa (means of knowledge) exists in Śiva or the spanda principle, even as the reflection of a city may be said to exist in a mirror. It is nothing but the mirror and the various objects in the city which appear different from one another and also from the mirror are nothing but the mirror itself. Thus the world is nothing but Śiva, though it appears different from Him, even as the various objects reflected in a mirror appear different but really speaking are not anything different from the mirror.

The first point that is made out is that when we say that the world rests in Śiva or that it has come forth from Śiva, we are speaking only from the popular, empirical point of view, not from the metaphysical point of view. The world is not contained in Him as a walnut in a bag where the walnut has its own independent existence and the bag for the time being contains it. The world has no separate existence from Śiva as the walnut has from the bag. So also when we say that the world has come out from Him, it is not meant that the world has come out from Him as a walnut comes out from a bag where both the walnut and the bag are separate from each other. The world and Śiva are not two separate entities. Śiva is the world from the point of view of appearance, and the world is Śiva from the point of view of Reality. Śiva is both transcendent to and immanent in the world—both Viśvottirṇa and viśvamaya.

The second point that is made out is that since the world owes its existence to Him, it cannot conceal Him even as a pot cannot conceal the potter, nor can it serve as an impediment in His free Self-expression and Self-expansion. That is to say He cannot be limited by space, time, figure, etc. This has another very important implication. Since the real or metaphysical Self of each individual is essentially Śiva, the world cannot throw a pall over it. Only the individual has to recognise his Self. As Kallaṭa puts it:

तस्य संसार्यवस्थायामपि अनाच्छादितस्वभाववत्वान्न न क्वचित् निरोधः

“Nothing can obstruct Him even in the state of the world, for the Self as Śiva has the nature which cannot be veiled.”

This Kārikā has also a mystic implication. Kṣemarāja has clearly pointed that out in the following words:

निमीलनोन्मीलनसमाधिद्वयेऽपि योगिना स्वस्वभावसमावेशपरेणैव भवितव्यम् ।

“Both in introverted and extroverted state of meditation the yogī should be intent on entering his essential nature which is Śiva.”

Introduction to the third verse:

An objection may be raised, "Such nature (of Śiva) is not experienced in the state of waking, etc. According to the arguments you have advanced, that nature is not restrained by anything or any one, but in the state of waking, etc, it is concealed by itself (because in these states such reality is not experienced)." On account of this doubt, the author explains to the uncomprehending in the following verse what has already been said.

Even though differing states like waking etc. occur in which, however, that Spanda principle remains identically the same, that Spanda principle never departs from its own nature as the identical Experient (in all the differing states).

TRANSLATION

The word jāgrat is synonym of jāgarā, for it has been used as such by the cultured ones.¹ Though differences in the states of waking, dream, and deep sleep well-known among common people or in the corresponding states of dhāranā (concentration) dhyāna (meditation) and intense absorption (samādhi), well known among the yogins continue as different from one another, yet as a matter of fact, that spanda principle never departs from its own invariable nature as the Self of all and as the Experient of every state. If that principle were to depart, the states of waking etc. being devoid of its light would not appear at all. Its nature as Experient in the state of waking and dream, is proved from Self-experience in the case of every one. Though in the case of deep sleep, its nature as Experient is not similarly known directly, yet it is proved from subsequent memory of it (the deep sleep) which could not otherwise justifiably occur unless there was a previous experience of that deep sleep. It (the Spanda principle) never departs or deviates from its nature as the Experient. Its objects of experience, such as state of deep sleep etc. may through its greatness, deviate with pleasure. Where is the harm in this?

१. क० ग० पु० रिक्तमिति पाठः ।

२. ग० पु० उभयमेलनात्मनेति पाठः ।

The word 'eva' is to be taken differently from the textual order in the sense of api (also). The meaning would then be 'Even in the absence of the states of waking and dream i.e. even in the state of deep sleep the spanda principle does not depart from its nature'.

(First explanation of tadabhinne):

The phrase tadabhinne (not separate from that) besides qualifying the phrase jāgarādi-vibheda (differing states of waking etc.) serves as a reason.² It means 'Because different states of waking etc. appear as non-different from the nature of Śiva (who is prakāśa), therefore, these are of the form of light. How can that which is identical with the other remain if the other departs? i.e. Since waking etc. are identical with Śiva, how can they exist, if Śiva or the spanda principle with which they are identical departs (from its nature as Experient).³

(Second Explanation)

Or tat (that) may be taken as subject of prasarpati, and abhinne (not separate) may be interpreted as the identity of waking, etc. with reference to Śiva. Now the construction would be tat jāgradādi-vibhed'pi (sati) prasarpati, and the meaning would be that "Spanda principle even while there are differing states like waking, etc. flows on i.e. assumes diversity. It never departs from its nature."⁴

Moreover, do the different states of walking, etc constitute pariṇāma (transformation or evolute) as the followers of Sāṃkhya and Pañcarātra believe or vivarta (illusory appearance) as gram-marians, etc.⁵ believe? The phrase tadabhinne has also been used by the author to refute their theory.

(Rejection of the theory of pariṇāma)

If the manifold states being transformation of consciousness were even slightly different from pure consciousness, then on their transformation, consciousness would also be slightly transformed. On the transformation of consciousness itself, nothing would appear (lit. would come to light).⁶ Therefore, the theory of transformation cannot hold good. As has been said in Śrīkīraṇa.⁷

“There can be transformation only of the insentient. It cannot be rightly applied to the sentient.”

(Rejection of the theory of vivarta):

That which is perceived cannot be unreal, for if it be unreal, there would be the predicament of the Brahman principle also becoming unreal. Therefore, the theory of vivarta is also inconsistent inasmuch as it connotes unreality, separation and the assumption of another form.⁸

From tadabhinne follows God's power of accomplishing even what is not within the range of possibility. Inasmuch as the Lord manifests the differing states of waking, etc, in the manifestation of that difference itself He manifests His identity.¹ Thus He flashes forth in difference by His power of aparā, in identity by His power of parā, in the form of identity in diversity by His power of parāparā. Thus it is God Himself who is manifest in the unparalleled Trika principle¹⁰ (the principle of triad).

From the mystic point of view this verse teaches that He is Śaṅkara Himself who even when remaining in the different states of waking, etc. constantly contemplates this identical nature of himself and thus experiences himself as the (ever-present) Experient.

NOTES

1. Strictly speaking, the noun form of the verb jāgr is jāgarā, but 'jāgrat' has also been used as a noun even by well-cultured writers. Hence the use of 'jāgrat' in place of jāgarā is justified.

2. This is known as hetugarbha viśeṣaṇa i.e. an adjective which does not only qualify the noun but contains implicitly a reason also. The reason which is implicit in this adjective clause is that 'because the states of waking, dream, etc are non-different from (i.e. identical with) the nature of Śiva which is light, therefore. they are also of the form of light'.

3. The idea is that since waking, etc. are identical with the spanda principle, they cannot remain i.e. they cannot appear or be manifest if the spanda principle as Experient departs. In the absence of the Experient, they will also vanish.

4. The nature of Śiva is not only permanent experiencing principle, but while remaining permanent experient, He assumes various kinds of differing forms

5. Et cetera refers to the Vedantins.

6. Just as when milk is transformed into curd, the milk has disappeared. It is no longer milk. It is now curd. Even so if consciousness is transformed into the manifold states, it can no longer remain consciousness. On the disappearance of consciousness, the manifold states will also vanish, for there can be no experience without the experient.

7. Śrīkīraṇa is the title of a book on tantra which is not available now.

8. There are three characteristics of vivarta, viz.

(1) it connotes illusory appearance (2) separation and (3) assumption of a different form. Since the world is not unreal, nor separate from, nor of a form different from Śiva or Consciousness, the theory of Vivarta cannot be accepted.

9. Without the Experient's continuing as identical in the different states, their differences themselves cannot be experienced. Therefore the experience of difference itself reveals the non-different i.e. the identical nature of the Experient.

10. Ṣaḍardha or half of six means three. This refers to the Trika philosophy of Kashmir which maintains that in manifestation there are three śaktis (powers) of Śiva that function, viz (1) parā the highest stage in which difference from Śiva has not yet started, (2) parā-parā, the intermediate stage in which in spite of difference the sense of identity persists, (3) aparā in which there is complete difference.

EXPOSITION

Two important points have been made out in this kārikā. Firstly, states of experience may differ, but the Experient does not deviate from his nature as Experient. He remains identical. As Kallaṭa puts it:

यस्माद् उपलब्ध-रूपत्वं त्रिष्वपि पदेषु साधारणम्, न तस्य स्वरूपान्यथाभावः, यथा विषस्याङ्कुरादिषु च पञ्चसु स्कन्धेषु ।

“Since the Experient remains the same in all the three states of waking, dream, and deep sleep, there is no deviation in his nature, just as the lotus remains the same in all its five parts. The following verse quoted by Utpala Bhaṭṭa beautifully expresses the same idea:

अवस्थास्वेव भेदोऽयं नावस्थातुः कदाचन ।

यथा विषस्याङ्कुरादौ तच्छक्तेर्न तु भिन्नता ।

“This difference is of the states not of the Experient who holds them i.e. who experiences those states just as there is difference in the sprouts etc. of the lotus. but not in the śakti (power) of the lotus.”

The differences themselves point to one common identical Reality which acts as anusandhātā i.e. which joins those differing states into the unity of the experience of one individual in the form ‘I who was awake, had a dream in sleep and then enjoyed sound sleep.’

Secondly, the different states of experience are nothing but an expression of Consciousness itself. They are not different from Consciousness.

These differing states can neither be explained as pariṇāma or transformation of consciousness nor as vivarta or illusory appearance. They are simply a display of the Svātantrya (absolute freedom) of Śiva.

There is a practical aspect of this philosophical truth in Sādhanā. One who contemplates zealously over the identity of the Experient in the midst of the changing states of experience becomes identified with Śiva.

The followers of Buddha say that we see that joy, depression, etc. are only different altered forms of one single consciousness. On the strength of this argument they hold that the continuum of jñāna or knowledge alone is Reality. (i.e. there is no jñātā-knower or experient apart from jñāna or knowledge). The Mīmāṃsakas hold that, that which is known in the consciousness of 'I' eclipsed by the conditions of pleasure etc is the Self. Both are refuted by a single verse (which follows)

TRANSLATION OF THE COMMENTARY

The same I who am happy, am miserable, am attached, being connected with affection which rests in pleasure, am full of hatred, being connected with dislike which is associated with pain—these cognitions or experiences abide in another which is the possessor of these states (avasthātari), which, in other words, is the permanent principle of Self. They rest inwardly in that evidently i.e. with one's Self as witness. Otherwise the inter-connection (anusandhāna) of the ephemeral cognitions and the ideas born of their residual traces will not be possible, for those cognitions disappear as soon as they arise and cannot leave behind any traces. Thus the vikalpas (ideas) supposed to arise out of them cannot actually arise. Not being perceived in experience, they cannot lead to any activity.¹

The particles 'ca' used with equal fitness (with all the three) express their inter-connexion. Anyatra means in another. Of what kind is this other ? Sukhādyavasthānusyūta qualifies anyatra (the other) and means that other in which states of pleasure, pain, etc. which arise and subside are interwoven i.e. are strung together i.e. that in which pleasure, pain, etc. stay inwardly as flowers are strung together in the form of a wreath in a string.

Tāh i.e. the previously experienced states when set in a congruous connection refer to their recollection. According to the view of the philosophers who believe in the momentariness of cognitions, memory is born of the residual traces of the previous experience, and is, as such, only a form tinged with the previous experience. Thus it can only be similar to the previous experience. It cannot bring back to consciousness the thing as it was actually experienced in the past.² (Let such philosophers please themselves with such a view of memory. It cannot be accepted by others).

The author suggests that when there is a permanent experient who abides inwardly in the consciousness of all, every thing is set aright. Enough of these subtleties which will only prove to be unpleasant to students of tender heart. Seekers after such subtleties may look into Pratyabhijñā.³ Since the author has referred to this reasoning, I have tried to explain it briefly. Let intelligent people not blame me for this brevity.

In order to refute the Mīmāṃsaka, this (i.e. the word Ātman or Self) should be interpreted in this way.

Those experiences such as 'I am happy.' I am miserable exist anyatra i.e. in another. 'In another' in this case should be interpreted as 'in the puryaṣṭaka Experient'. So the experiences of pleasure, pain, etc. exist in the puryaṣṭaka experient who is suffused with these experiences. Sphuṭam or 'evidently' means 'to which popular belief bears witness.' Anyatra in their case does not mean 'in Śaṅkara' who is compact mass of light and bliss and who is our own essential nature as is accepted by us. Therefore, this Self is not always tarnished by the conditions of pleasure, pain, etc, but is rather of the nature of consciousness. When He by His own impurity to be described later conceals his essential nature and appears in that state, then He is in the Puryaṣṭaka state, and has the experience of happiness, etc. It has already been said that even in that state, pleasure etc. cannot obstruct His real nature. He is never concealed by pleasure, etc.

The real purport in saying 'I am happy; I am miserable' etc. by abandoning such beliefs as I am thin; I am fat etc is this.

One recognises one's essential nature as Śiva by submerging his Puryuṣṭaka state which is full of experiences like pleasure, etc. in the inner essential Self and also by dissolving along with it the external aspect consisting of the body, jar, etc. Thus one should always make an earnest effort for allaying the Puryuṣṭaka.

NOTES

1. The idea is that when jñāna (perception or cognition) disappears as soon as it arises, it cannot leave behind any traces. Thus on this theory of the momentariness of perception, memory, will not be possible.

2. This means to say that similarity of the past experience which is all that the Buddhists can maintain on the basis of their theory of the momentariness of cognitions cannot lead to the belief that it is the same thing which was actually experienced in the past. Similarity is not sameness. Without the belief in the sameness of the past experience, memory is not possible. And without an identical pramātā or experient who can connect the past experience with the present, there cannot be any sameness of experience. Thus without an identical pramātā or experient, memory would be impossible.

3. This refers to Īśvara-pratyabhijñā of Utpaladeva.

EXPOSITION

The first point to be borne in mind is the significance of the use of plural in saṃvid. Samvid in plural (saṃvidah) means perception, cognitions, experiences. They are not the same saṃvid which is one identical, uniform consciousness underlying all other saṃvids. As Rāmakaṇṭha puts it:

“एकैव संविद् उपलब्धरूपा अहमिति स्फुरन्ती पारमार्थिकी, मायाशक्तिजनित-तथाविधस्वभावपरामर्शाभावबलात् सुखाद्यनित्यवस्तुवेदकत्वेन अहं सुखी दुःखी च—इत्यादिना बुद्ध्याद्यवस्थासामानाधिकरण्यम् उपगता सती, संविद इति बहुवचनेन निर्दिष्टा” ।

“Samvit or Consciousness in its highest sense is really one, the Experient of all, flashing forth as ‘I’. On account of the absence of that awareness brought about by māyā-śakti, it becomes the cognizer of such impermanent incidental experience as ‘I am happy,

I am miserable, etc., Really speaking these are the states of buddhi (inner determinative consciousness which assumes the role of the self or the Experient, and the real Experient on account of its co-relation with buddhi etc. misconceives these states as his own. It is because of this that the word saṃvid has been used in plural. They really belong to the pseudo-experient buddhi, not to the underlying Samvit, the Self, the unchanging, identical Experient.

The other important point to be borne in mind is that though these states are not of the Self, though they do not belong to the essential nature of the Self, they are held together into the unity of one experience by that unchanging identical Experient that runs like a thread through them all. This is what is meant by saying सुखाद्यवस्थानुस्यूते वर्तन्ते ताः “Those states have their ratio essendio in another Experient that runs like a thread through them all. Rāmakaṇṭha explains the status of this experient beautifully in the following words:

म च पूर्वापरावस्थाव्यापकत्वेन समस्तप्रमातृप्रसिद्धः

सकलव्यवहारहेतोः अनुसन्धानस्य कर्ता, नित्य

उपलब्धमात्ररूपत्वाद् एक एव प्रकाशते ॥

“He (the Experient) pervades all the preceding and the succeeding states throughout which is well-known even to all empirical selves: he provides that synthetic unity which serves as the foundation of all pragmatic life, which being unchanging, permanent Experient ever shines as one and the same.”

It is this important truth which the great German philosopher Kant expressed after nearly one thousand years, in his famous concept of the ‘synthetic unity of apperception’.

Lastly, this philosophic truth must lead to yogic practice which Kṣemarāja describes in the last section of his commentary.

Knowing that changing states like pleasure, pain belong to the puryaṣṭaka i.e, the psychological or the empirical self, one should establish oneself in his essential Self which is the real Experient, which is the nature of Śiva.

TRANSLATION

It can be said that here whatever inner object there is like pain, pleasure, etc., or whatever external object there is like blue or yellow and whatever subject there is like the purvashaka, body and senses have evidently no existence like the stage of deep sleep as long as they are not experienced. When they are experienced, then being experienced, they are of the nature of consciousness. They are simply consciousness, this is what it comes to. As has been said in Īśvarapratyabhijñā by my great grand teacher, revered Utpaladeva who knew the essence of the secret doctrine.

“The object that is made manifest is of the nature of the light of consciousness. What is not light cannot be said to exist.” (I.pr.I,5,3). In this book also, it will be said

“Because of being of the form of His cognition, and owing to the acquisition of identity with Him.” (II,3).

Thus that is the real principle of the compact mass of light in which there is neither an object like pain, pleasure, blue etc. nor their experient.

Well, if all subjects and objects are disposed of as non-existent, Reality is then mere Void. This is what it comes to.

(Reply)

No, there is also not mere insentiency. This means that there is not mere vacuity also. Insentiency is either manifest or non-manifest. If it is non-manifest, how can it be said to exist at all. If it is manifest, then because of its being manifest, it is nothing else but light. There can never be absence of light. In its absence, even the absence of light cannot be proved. This will find its place in ‘not that internal nature’. (I,16) in this book.

(Another explanation of mūḍha-bhāva).

Further, in these where is no insentiency, insentiency as understood by the vedāntists, viz. as ‘Brahman’, i.e. mere light devoid of the supreme power of vimarśa is also not there. The Vedāntists say ‘Knowledge is Brahman’, but such Brahman without the power of Spanda in the form of absolute Freedom would be mere lifeless, insentient, inert matter. As has been said in Īśvara-pratyabhijñā.

“People know vimarśa as the very nature of the light of consciousness, Otherwise light even if reflecting things would be insentient like a crystal”. (I.pr.I.5.11).

In the following verse of Bhaṭṭa Nāyaka also, it is said:

“O Lord, how much fruit can this great Brahman being enuch bear if thy beautiful Śakti were not there to stimulate thy masculine power?"

Thus that principle alone has real existence which has been discussed in 'where all this rests' (verse 2) and further on. That and that alone exists in the highest sense as is proved by reasoning, experience, and revealed traditional scripture. That exists in the natural, perfect form, not in the artificial form like blue, etc. As has been said by the great teacher:¹

"The insentient things are in themselves as good as non-existent. They have their existence only when connected with light. The light of oneself alone exists both in one's own form and in the form of others i.e. both as Subject (pramātā) and object (prameya) (Ajaḍa pr,13)

Revered Bhartṛhari² also says:

"That which exists in the beginning, in the end, and also in the middle alone has reality. That which simply appears has no reality, it is real only as long as it appears."

As the sentences of the text convey a determinate, limited sense in each case, the word eva should be joined thrice³. Thus by this kārikā the author has declared that ultimate Reality is only of the form of Spanda-Śakti by repeatedly pointing out the nonreality, on account of untenability of the views of the Bauddhas who maintain that Reality is a continuum of consciousness in the form of pleasure, etc., of the Cārvākas who maintain that reality is only the subject affected by pleasure, etc., of the followers of Sāṃkhya who maintain the plurality of the subject and the object, of the nihilists who maintain the absence of everything, of the Vedantists who maintain that Brahman is only prakāśa (light) without any activity.

Moreover, when in that noble person who attentively pursues the teaching, the Spanda principle, whose quintessence is flashing, throbbing consciousness, becomes manifest, then even when experiences of pain, pleasure, object, subject or their absence occur, they are considered by him as naught, because to him everything appears only as the quintessence of the delight of Spanda.

It has been taught that this is what is spanda. The venerable teacher refers to this truth in the following verse.

“That is the path pertaining to Śaṅkara in which pains become pleasure, poison becomes nectar, and the world that binds the soul becomes liberation.”(U. Stotra 20,12).

The path pertaining to Śaṅkara means the preminent expansion of the Highest Śakti who becomes a means to the attainment of the nature of Śaṅkara.

NOTES

1. This refers to Utpaladeva.

2. This refers to the grammarian Bhartṛhari who wrote the philosophy of Grammar known as Vākyaṇḍīya.

3. Kṣemarāja means that with the addition of eva the sentence would read as follows:

“यदादौ च तस्य एव सत्यता, यदन्ते च तस्य एव सत्यता, यन्मध्ये च तस्य एव सत्यता” ।

4. This again refers to Utpaladeva.

EXPOSITION

The main point that has been stressed in this verse is that neither the experience of internal states like pleasure and pain, nor of external states like blue and yellow are the highest reality. Even the subject who experiences these states is not the highest reality. What the author means to say is that neither the psychological experiences, nor the psychological subject is the Highest Reality.

Kallaṭa, in his vytti, expresses the nature of the Highest Reality in the following words:

“तस्य चायं स्वभावो-यत्र सुबुद्धुःखग्राह्यग्राहकमूढतादिभावैरस्पृष्टः स एव परमार्थतोऽस्ति नित्यत्वात् सुखादयः पुनः सङ्कल्पोत्थाः क्षणभंगुरा आत्मबाह्याः शब्दादिविषयतुल्याः” ।

This is the nature of Śiva (or the Spand principle) that He is untouched, unaffected by the experiences of pleasure, pain, etc; for Śiva or the Essential Self is the eternal experient. Pleasure, pain cannot be His nature, for two reasons. Firstly, they are passing phases of experience, perishing in an instant (kṣaṇabhāṅgurā). The Self is eternal. Therefore, they are external to the nature of the Self like sound, form and other objects (ātmasvarūpā bāhyāḥ śabdādi-viśayatulyāḥ). Secondly, they arise from thought constructs (saṅkalpotthāḥ), whereas the Self is nirvikalpa i.e. it transcends the sphere of thought-constructs. For this reason also, pleasure, pain etc. cannot constitute the nature of Self.

Why are pleasure, pain etc. rejected as not forming a part of the nature of the Self? Rāmakaṇṭha answers the question in the following words in his vivṛiti.

“By the rejection of pleasure, etc, it is the objectivity of Self that is rejected”. The Self can never be reduced to an object, it is the eternal Subject.

A pertinent question that arises here is this:

In verse three, it has been said, “He (Śiva) never departs from His nature as the Experient.” In verse five, it is said, “He is neither the subject i.e. experient nor the object.” Are these two statements not inconsistent? How can they be reconciled?

Rāmakaṇṭha anticipates this objection and answers it in the following way:

ग्राहकोऽपि मायीयः प्रमाता अत्र विवक्षितः, न तात्त्विक उपलब्धमात्रस्वरूपः, तस्य एवं नित्यसत्त्वेन प्रतिपाद्यमानत्वात् । एवं मायीयो देहाद्यहंकारमयो ग्राहको-
ऽपि यत्र नास्ति ।’

“By subject here, what is intended to be said is the māyīya pramātā i.e. the empirical subject, not the real, metempirical Self, for he has been explained only as the Eternal Experient. Thus the psychosomatic subject is not that Reality.”

Finally, another question that arises is this. If he has nothing to do with the subject or object, if he is neither object, nor subject, then is he mere negation, mere void, insentient like a stone?

Kṣemarāja has in his commentary controverted all these views with merciless logic, and concludes by saying

तत्र पारमार्थिकं स्पन्दशक्तिरूपमेव तत्त्वमस्ति

“It is metempirical reality whose essential form is Spanda-śakti.”

Rāmakaṇṭha also says:

तत् वस्तु परमार्थतः अस्ति, सततम् अविलुप्तोपलब्धमात्रलक्षणस्वभावत्वात् ।
(p.34) “He is the highest Reality whose nature it is to be an eternal Subject (never an object).”

The mystic application of this teaching consists in the fact that he who realizes this truth is never affected by the misfortunes of life.

Translation of the Commentary

That principle which has been finally ascertained with the exposition of 'Udyamo Bhairavaḥ' given in Śiva-śūtras (5,6) should be examined with great care and reverence. That principle should be examined as the cessation of all differences¹ (in the state of dissolution), as the expansion of one's own power (in the state of manifestation) as cherishing of the perfect inner nature (in the state of maintenance) and in the form of the emergence of the nature of Bhairava.

That innate Freedom in the form of Spanda principle known to every one through Self-experience being one's own essential nature, identical with Śiva is manifest everywhere both with reference to the sentient and the insentient.²

Sphuranti sthitā i.e. 'abides flashing' is to be supplied to complete the sense.

What is that principle? The author describes it from 'Yataḥ upto the end of 'labhate.'

Ayaṁ karaṇavargaḥ means 'this group of senses.' This group of senses refers to the sense-organs well known to people, not to karaṇeśvari-varga (the group of the divinities of the senses) which is described in the sāstras, for being always imperceptible, it cannot be referred to as 'this'. By group of senses is meant the thirteen senses (5 organs of sense+5 organs of action + manas, buddhi and ahaṅkāra i.e. the ego-sense). The adjective vimūḍha (insentient) applied to 'the group of senses' means 'distinctly insentient' i.e. appearing as insentient owing to the influence of Māyā.' This group of senses, though insentient to a great degree in a limited empirical being, acquires, like the non-insentient i. e. the sentient, the power of going forth, staying, and withdrawing (pravṛtti (sthiti-saṁhṛti)). Pravṛtti means going forth i.e. being directed towards the objects of sense¹; sthiti means 'feeling attached to them' and 'saṁhṛti' means 'withdrawing from them'.

How do they go forth? They do so along with the inner group. One view is that here the inner group means the *karaṇeśvaris*³, (the sense-divinities), and not antaḥ-karaṇa i.e. the inner senses, for the inner senses are already included in karaṇa-varga (the group of senses). Nor does the antara-cakra i.e. the inner group of śaktis refer to puryaṣṭaka (the group of eight i.e. the five tanmātrās, and manas, buddhi and ahaṁkāra) to be described later, for the triad of the inner senses (i.e. manas, buddhi and ahaṁkāra) residing in puryaṣṭaka is already included in kaṛaṇa varga (the group of the senses).

The triad of manas, buddhi and ahaṁkāra may not be included in (antara cakra, what about the five tanmātras? Kṣemarāja takes up the question of the tanmātras now).

The five tanmātras are also not to be included in the antara cakra, for they are like mere seminal impressions and are not known as directly functioning in pravṛtti, etc. in the case of beginners who are mere pupils and are not yogis. So far as yogī is concerned, he has directly experienced the tanmātras, and is himself intent on realizing the supreme principle. So he needs no instruction. Therefore, this partisan view is wrong.⁴

Vimūḍho amūḍhavat—Though insentient like a sentient being—‘this phrase also refers to the group of senses,’ not to the inner group of sense-divinities, for that (i.e., the group of sense-divinities) is of the nature of Consciousness-bliss.

The sense of what is said in the first four lines is this:

“This Śaṅkara who is one’s own essential nature through His Freedom which accomplishes impossible things manifests simultaneously as one the group of sense-divinities (Kaṛaṇeśvart-cakra) which is the quintessence of consciousness and the group of senses (kaṛaṇavarga) which is apparently insentient and makes them perform such acts as moving towards objects, staying there (for a short while) and then withdrawing. Thus whatever the sense-divinities do, as for instance, bringing about the manifestation of different objects etc. that the group of senses, though insentient, also appears to be doing.

Though from the esoteric point of view there is no such thing as insentient group of senses—rather it is the sense-divinities which are of the nature of consciousness that expand in that way, still in this world a pupil has to be taught at first according to well-known beliefs and then gradually he has to be led to the teaching of esoteric matters.

Thus one should, by watching carefully the group of one’s own sense divinities, presiding over the functions of forth-going etc. of the sense-organs, etc. carefully examine one's essential Self identical with Śaṅkara who impels both the group of senses and the group of sense-divinities. This is also implied by the above teaching that the yogin, in acquiring his essential nature, will also acquire its natural Freedom.⁵

Hence, this being the highest aim is worthy of being examined. This alone can be examined, because by the aforesaid reasoning, it is easy means (for the attainment of the aim). Therefore, it should be examined with respect and great consideration, for it leads to the unhindered enjoyment of one's desired object. Such an examination according to the teaching contained in this book is done at the fit time. As has been said by the teacher who⁶ knew the secret doctrine:

“These sense-activities of mine may, in their joy, have full play in their objects. But, O Lord, grant that I may not have the temerity of losing even for a moment and even slightly the enjoyment of the bliss of identity with thee” (U.Sto.VIII,5).

The kṛtya suffix in parikṣyam (‘should be examined’) denotes arhā or worthiness, śakyatā or practicability, prāptakālatā or timeliness, praiṣa or command, etc.⁷

By maintaining that the insentient group of senses acquires its power from the Spanda principle and acts like a sentient being in moving towards the objects, etc. a fact to which the self-experience of every one bears witness, the author has incidentally refuted the view of Cārvākas who attribute consciousness to the senses.⁸

1. Sarvabhedopasamhāra indicates the power of dissolution (samhāra), nijauja-vṛtti-sphāraṇa-rūpeṇa indicates the power of manifestation (sṛṣṭi); paripūrṇāntarmukhasvarūpa-sevanātmanā indicates the power of maintenance (sthiti).

2. Jaḍa (insentient) refers to kaṛaṇa-varga or the group of senses, and ajaḍa (sentient) refers to Karaṇeśvari-varga, the inner senses-divinities.

3. Karaṇeśvarīs means the group of the inner divinities that preside over the senses and make them function properly.

4. The view that antara-cakra refers to the inner karāṇeśvarīs the inner sense-divinities, and not to antaḥ-karaṇa, the inner group of senses (manas, buddhi and ahankāra) is, according to Kṣemarāja, wrong.

5. This svatantratā or Freedom is called akṛtrimā i.e. natural or innate, because as Rāmakaṇṭha puts it, it is akṛtrimā sahaiva, na tu upādāna-sahakāryādi-kāraṇātarāpekṣiṇī svecchāmātrādhīna-sakala-kārya-kartṛtvarūpā (p. 33) i.e. it is not dependent on any material cause or any other auxiliary cause (in achieving its object), because it is self-sufficient to accomplish every thing by its mere Will.

6. This refers to Utpaladeva.

7. There is kṛtya suffix in parikṣyam. According to Pāṇini, kṛtya suffix denotes arhā or worthiness. śakyatā or practicability, prāptakālatā or fitness of time, praiśa or command. All these apply to parikṣyam. One's essential nature or Spanda principle should be examined, because nothing can be so worthy of examination as one's own essential nature. This is arhatā or worthiness of examination. It can be examined. It is practicable, it is not impossible. This shows śakyatā or practicability of examination. When the senses are functioning and are engaged in their objects, that is the exact time when one should examine the power behind the senses that makes them function in that way. This shows prāptakālatā or fitness of time for the examination.

Finally, parikṣyam i.e. 'should be examined' denotes praiśa or command of the teacher who knows the secret doctrine.

8. Cārvākas believe that the senses have consciousness. By showing that the senses do not have consciousness per se but derive it from the spanda principle, the author has refuted the theory of the Cārvākas.

EXPOSITION

People in general and the materialists in particular think that it is the senses which carry out the function of pravṛtti, sthiti and saṁhṛti i.e. it is the senses which actively go out towards the objects of perception (pravṛtti) maintain them in perception for a while (sthiti) and finally return to themselves (saṁhṛti).

This verse teaches that the senses do not have the power of these functions in themselves; they derive this power from something else. That something else should be reverentially examined. That is the Spanda principle, that is Śiva; that is one's own essential Self.

It is because this Self is not perceptible as an object, therefore we are unaware of it. This has to be known inwardly as the Seer of all the seen. Utpala Bhaṭṭa in his Spanda-pradīpikā quotes a beautiful verse to re-enforce this truth:

अदृश्यं नेत्रवद् ब्रह्म द्रष्टृत्वं चास्ति नेत्रवत् ।
स्वात्मन्येवोपलम्भोऽस्य दर्शनं घटवन्न तु ॥

“Like the eye, Brahma is not the seen, like the eye, it is only the seer. Its ascertainment is only within One's own Self; it is not an object of sight like a jar.”

Translation of the commentary

Ayam means this empirical individual. Ichhaiva nodanam pratodaḥ tasya means 'of the goad of desire'. The whole of the first line of the verse means 'he does not set out to move the senses (towards their objects)'.
 But he becomes equal to it (tatsamo bhavet) by the contact i.e. by the entrance into him, to some extent, of the power of the Self which is Consciousness and which is of the nature of Spanda. The sense is that the sense-group, even though insentient acquires sentiency by the consecration of the drops of blissful sap of I-consciousness. Thence that Spanda principle not only moves the senses but rather by infusing consciousness into the supposed experient makes him capable of effecting the movement, etc. of the senses by virtue of which he is full of the erroneous conception, "I am directing the senses". He himself is nothing without the infusion of the Spanda principle into him. Therefore, it is perfectly right to say that one should examine that principle which provides consciousness to both the senses and the perceiver by the impenetration of the forth-going rays of its own light.

If it is maintained that one directs the senses by an internal sense which uses a goad called desire, then that sense called desire being itself of the nature of the directed would require another sense for setting it in motion, and that in its turn would require another and so on. Thus there would be regressus ad infinitum.

As regards the objection that is raised, viz., 'Our desire does not exert itself in moving towards that' in that case also, the first half of the verse should be used as an admission of this position, and the latter half as a reply.

True this empirical individual cannot move his desire to examine the Spanda-principle, nor is he capable of experiencing that reality by desire, because it is beyond the range of thought, even then when, calming down his desire which is in pursuit of objects of pleasure by at first allowing it to have its enjoyment, he contacts the Spanda-principle which is the power of the inner Self and which endows his senses with consciousness, then he becomes equal to that Spanda-principle i.e. by being immersed in that reality, he acquires freedom everywhere like that. Since such is the case, that principle should be examined. This is the sense. The expression 'by the touch of the power of Self' has been used, because the quality of touch is predominant in the stage of Śakti.

EXPOSITION

The gist of the verse is that man falsely imagines that he moves his senses to perform their respective functions by the power of his will or desire. His so-called desire has no power of its own. It derives its power of both knowing and doing from Śiva or Spanda-principle whose very nature is knowledge and activity. One has, therefore, to acquire the power of Spanda which is our own essential Self, neither by weaving intellectual cobwebs, nor by maiming desire, but by surrendering all desires, the entire personal will to the Divine. As Tennyson puts it:

“Our wills are ours, we know not how to make them thine.”

When the personal citta or mind completely empties itself, then is it truly filled.

Kṣemarāja brings out in his commentary a very important principle of this system. It believes that while Śakti, the Divine Creative Power rejects all the perceptual qualities like rūpa, rasa, gandha, etc. she retains sparśa or touch. How is that Reality to be touched? Kṣemarāja says: “Tatsamāveśāt” ‘i.e. by penetration, by diving mentally into its innermost depth. This is the mystic union.

TRANSLATION

Nija means one's own. (Now asuddhi or impurity is explained). First of all there is the *mala*¹ or limitation pertaining to the aṇu or jīva, the empirical being which consists in the consciousness of imperfection. This āṇava mala is the first asuddhi. This occurs when Icchā-śakti (Will power of Śiva) becomes limited owing to non-contemplation of His essential nature which is brought into play by the absolute Freedom of Śiva Himself.

Jñānaśakti (the power of knowledge) being polluted by the five kañcukas or coverings (of Māyā) arisen from that (āṇava-mala) gradually acquires limitation in the sphere of difference so that its omniscience becomes reduced to limited knowledge and at last it acquires utmost limitation in the formation of the psychic apparatus (antaḥkaraṇa) and the organs of sense (buddhindriya). This is māyīya limitation (i.e. limitation brought about by Māyā) which brings about consciousness of difference among objects. This māyīya mala is the second āsuddhi.

Kriyā śakti (the power of activity) gets limited gradually in the sphere of difference when omnipotence is reduced to limited activity till at last by the formation of the organs of action, the empirical individual gets limited to the utmost extent. He thus performs good and bad acts. This is the Kārma mala or limitation due to action. This is the third kind of impurity.²

Thus by such impurity, the individual becomes devoid of omniscience and omnipotence.

(Now Kṣemarāja explains the phrase Kartavyeṣu abhilāṣiṇaḥ of the text.)

Being thus incapacitated he is attached to all kinds of actions—worldly and those prescribed by the scriptures. On account of the non-attainment of all his desired objects, he is distracted by his desires and is unable to find rest in his essential nature even for a moment.

(Now Kṣemarāja explains the remaining half of the verse from Yadā . . . upto padam).

When by a firm support of the reasoning already mentioned and also to be mentioned later on and of self-experience, his perturbation³ appearing in the form of an experient who is helplessly dominated by desires, thoroughly dissolves (pralīyeta = prakarṣeṇa līyeta) through the vanishing of the misconception of the not-Self as the Self and of the Self as the not-self, then the highest state, viz. the spanda-principle will emerge i.e. will come within the range of recognition of that experient. Not that the Spanda-principle is something that comes into existence only at that time, for it is eternal (i.e. the Spanda-principle is always there; only its recognition is new).

It has been rightly said in Vijñānabhairava: “O dear one, when the ideating mind (manas), the ascertaining intellect (buddhi), the vital energy (prāṇa śakti) and the limited experient, I—this set of four dissolves, then the previously described (tat) state of Bhairava appears”. (verse, 138).

Those who by the phrase 'one's own impurity' think that there is a separate substance called mala (dross) have been indirectly criticized in the above commentary.

NOTES

1 Aśuddhi or impurity simply means mala. Mala does not mean an impure substance but only limiting condition.

2. The experient becomes limited by three kinds of mala-āṇava, Māyīya and Kārma. Āṇava mala is the primal limiting condition which reduces the universal consciousness to an anu, a small, limited entity. It is owing to this that the jīva (individual soul) considers himself apūrṇa, imperfect, cut off from the universal consciousness. In this condition, the individual forgets his essential divine nature.

māyīya mala is the limiting condition brought about by māyā that gives to the soul its gross and subtle body. It is bhinna vedya prathā—that which brings about the consciousness of difference owing to the differing limiting adjuncts of the bodies.

Kārmamala arises on account of the limitation of the organs of action and is due to the residual impressions of good and bad actions.

Āṇava mala is the innate ignorance of one's essential nature. Māyīya mala arises on account of the limitation of jñāna-śakti (the power of knowledge), and Kārma mala arises on account of the limitation of Kriyāśakti.

3. Kṣobha or perturbation is due to primal ignorance owing to which the limited individual considers the not-Self, as Self and the Self as the not-Self.

EXPOSITION

If man is really divine, why is he so imperfect and stands in need of the power of the inner Self? The ninth verse contains the answer to this question.

The divine plan of evolution contains two movements. There is first of all gradual descent of the Self in inconscient matter. Two things happen in this process of descent. The empirical being forgets his essential divine nature. This is āṇava mala. Secondly, he gets confined to subtle and gross bodies. This is māyīya mala. As he is engaged in all sorts of good and bad acts, these leave behind their impressions in his mind which act as a strong force dragging him down to material existence of further experiences. This is Kārma mala. These limiting conditions are called aśuddhi (impurity, limitation) in the verse.

It is only at the human level that ascent to the divine status can start. The main obstacle in his ascent is his pseudo-self that arrogates to itself the status of the main actor in the drama. This pseudo-self has been called kṣobha in the verse, for it is this that is responsible for all the fret and fever of life. When this is dissolved, then Self-forgetfulness is replaced by Self-recollection and man's evolution is complete.

TRANSLATION

Well, if the perturbation in the form of I-consciousness of the limited, empirical individual is dissolved, then reality will be devoid of activity and will become like a waveless ocean. To allay this doubt, the author says:

TRANSLATION

The word tadā meaning 'then' is used with reference to the pupil who is to be instructed. Akṛtrimo dharmah means innate nature, which has been previously explained as Freedom, which is the nature of the highest Lord. Jñatva and Kartṛtva mean 'cognition' 'activity' of the nature of light and bliss blended harmoniously. Lakṣaṇa means everpresent characteristic. The whole compound word Jñatva-kartṛtva-lakṣaṇa, therefore, means that whose ever present characteristic is Jñāna (knowledge) and kriyā (activity) of the nature of light and bliss which are harmoniously blended. Tadā means that this characteristic becomes manifest in the limited empirical individual at the time of the cessation of perturbation.

Wherefore does it become manifest in him ? The author answers this query in the following way.

At the time of entrance in the supreme state, all that he (the limited experient) desired to know or to do at the time of the desire to enter that state, he is able to know and do.

The particle ca repeated twice (attached to jānāti and karoti) suggests simultaneity, not as some think, identity of knowledge and activity. It (i.e. the identity of knowledge and activity) is already implied by the adjectival phrase 'characterized by knowledge and activity' qualifying dharmā or nature, and by pointing out that with which it is connected, it becomes descriptive of its real nature.

EXPOSITION

The knowledge and activity of the empirical individual are kṛtrima (artificial) because firstly they are limited, secondly they are borrowed, i.e. derived from another source, viz., the Spanda-principle or the higher Self.

When the limited ego of the individual is dissolved and his perturbation ceases, then he does not become inert like stone; then he requires the real, innate nature of jñāna and kriyā which is characteristic of the existential Self. Then his inability to know and do whatever he wants to know and do ceases and he is now able to know and do whatever he desires to know or do.

Rāmakaṅṭha adds “वस्तुत एकैव ईश्वरस्य स्वभावप्रत्यवमर्शरूपा शक्तिः, सा संवेदनरूपत्वाज् ज्ञानशब्देन उच्यते, तावन्मात्रसंरम्भरूपत्वात् क्रियाशब्देन च उद्घोष्यते” । (p. 42)

“Really speaking there is one śakti of the Divine, viz. the consciousness of his essential nature as I. The same Śakti in the form of perceiving or feeling, is known as jñāna or knowledge; in the form of its volitional activity, it is known as kriyā or activity.”

TRANSLATION

A Yogī who closely observes his own (inmost) nature which is the Spanda-principle recognized by means of the reasoning (already) mentioned, apprehends knowledge and activity as the presiding principle¹ of life as the ‘I’ pervading the normal consciousness even after meditation has ceased. His middle state (madhya daśā) develops as described in Vijñānabhairava in the following words :

“When the middle state develops by means of the dissolution of all dichotomising thought-constructs (nirvikalpatayā), the prāṇa śakti in the form of exhalation (prāṇa) does not go out from the centre (of the body) to *dvādaśānta*², nor does that śakti in the form of inhalation (apāna) enter into the centre from dvādaśānta. In this way, by means of Bhairavī who expresses herself in the form of the cessation of prāṇa (exhalation) and apāna (inhalation), one acquires the form of Bhairava. “(V. B. verse 26), or as described in Kakṣyāstotra in the following words :

“Throwing by will all the powers like seeing, etc. simultaneously on all sides into their respective objects and remaining (unmoved) in the middle like a gold pillar, you (O Śiva) alone appear as the form of the entire cosmos.”

Thus all his thought-constructs vanish (vigalita-sakalavikalpo) by means of the traditional teaching, by nimilana and unmilana samādhi by the firm hold of the middle state³ which pervades simultaneously both nimilana (Visarga) and unmilana samādhi (araṇi). As taught in the sacred tradition, he enters the Bhairavamudrā in which all his senses are widely open simultaneously but the attention is turned within as described in the following verse :

“Attention should be turned inwards; the gaze should be turned outwards, without the twinkling of the eyes. This is the *mudrā*⁴ pertaining to Bhairava, kept secret in all the Tantras.”

He sees the totality of objects appearing and disappearing in the ether of his consciousness like a series of reflections appearing and disappearing in a mirror. Instantly all his thought-constructs are split asunder by the recognition, after a thousand lives, of his essential nature surpassing common experience and full of unprecedented bliss. He is struck with amazement, as though entering the mudrā of amazement.⁵ As he obtains the experience of vast expansion, suddenly his proper, essential nature comes to the fore.

The word āste in the verse denotes the idea that he does not relax his firm hold (of the Spanda-principle).

Iyaṃ kusṛtiḥ means this wandering (sṛtiḥ) consisting in the wretched succession of life and death which causes tremor in all people of the world does not occur in his case, because of the absence of its cause consisting in innate impurity. As has been said in Śrī Pūrva Śāstra :⁶

‘One’ whose mind is fixed on reality, even though enjoying sense-objects, cannot be touched by vice, even as a lotus-leaf cannot be touched by water.

As one who is equipped with mantra, etc. that removes the effect of poison, does not, even after devouring poison, become unconscious under its influence, similarly a yogi of great wisdom (is not affected by the enjoyment of sense-objects)’ (M. V. XVIII, 120).

NOTES

1. Presiding principle means the principle that is the permanent Experiencer of all experiences.

2. Dvādaśānta—a distance of twelve fingers from the tip of the nose.

3. The middle state is cidānanda-consciousness-bliss.

4. Mudrā means the disposition and control of certain organs of the body as help in concentration.

5. This refers to vismaya-mudrā in which the mouth is wide open, and the tongue lolls out.

6. Pūrva-śāstra is another name of Mālīnī-vijaya-tantra.

EXPOSITION

When the yogī realizes the spanda principle, then he knows that this is his essential Self, and not the empirical, psychosomatic creature whom he had so long considered to be his Self. He has now broken his shackles and is truly free.

The Vedāntists, the Naiyāyikas the Mādhyamikas have taught that after the dissolution of agitation, there remains only the principle of naught i. e. universal destruction. In order to awaken them (from their ignorance), the author, in opposition to the reality as understood by them, elucidates the extra-ordinary characteristic of the spanda-principle which is the subject-matter of this treatise.

Mere non-existence cannot be an object of contemplation, nor can it be said there is no stupefaction in that state, because on account of the application of backward reference, it is certain that it (i.e. the experience of stupefaction) was there (in that state).

Hence that artificial object of knowledge is always like sound sleep. It is not in this manner i.e. as a state of recollection that the Spanda-principle is known.

TRANSLATION

Non-existence as understood by the Vedāntist according to the statement, ‘Verily, in the beginning, all this was not’ cannot be an object of contemplation, for contemplation is (always) of an object that can be existent. Abhāva or non-existence is simply nothing.

If the existential conception be ascribed to it, it will have to be treated as something, and thus there will be the negation of non-existence. (i.e. in that case there will be the non-existence of non-existence itself, for something implies existence).

Moreover, how can that universal extinction be conceived or contemplated where the conceiver or contemplator himself disappears? If the conceiver or contemplator is accepted (as existing), then universal extinction is an impossible conception, for in that case the conceiver remains (as the witness of the extinction, and even if one conceiver is there, then the adjective 'universal' will not apply to extinction). Hence universal extinction or negation does not constitute Reality.

(Elucidation of the position of the Mādhyamika)

This is the position of the Mādhyamika (iti pakṣaḥ),

The so-called (imaginary) conceiver or the contemplator contemplating universal negation by imagination becomes, on the perfection of contemplation, himself non-existent, being identified with his object of contemplation which is abhāva or non-existence.

(The author's reply):

It is said in reply—For the contemplation of total negation or void, there is no non-insentieny, but rather there is insentieny or stupefaction.

“Therefore whether existent or non-existent, whatever is imagined later, on the perfection of the contemplation, is evidently only a product of imagination.”

According to the above principle, by the contemplation of negation in the form of universal extinction there can never be the attainment of the highest Reality, the ultimate object of life.

If it is said that sūnya or void is like this as stated by Nāgārjuna in the following lines:

“That which is devoid of all supports (whether external or internal), that which is devoid of all tattvas (constitutive principles), that which is devoid of the residual traces of all the kleśas, that is Śūnya or void. In the highest sense, it is not sūnya or void as such,” then our reply is, “True, if the absolutely free, and ultimate state consisting of Consciousness-bliss be admitted as the substratum (of all), as has been described in Vijñānabhairava, that contemplation of the void should be made by making the divine, supreme reality of consciousness as the substratum, as declared in the verse “The Highest is that which is free of all notions pertaining to direction (dik), time (kāla) etc. (V. Bh. Verse 14), otherwise, the statement, “there is no void as such” would be devoid of all sense, as has been explained in the verse Yad yad eva atibhāvya above.

The statement that is made in Ālokamālā, viz., “That state is called void which is something unknown to people like ourselves, not that which, according to the popular belief, is the sense assigned to it by the atheists.”

This is true, but if it is unknown to people like yourselves, it should be said that on account of its unknowability, it is impossible to express it. Why call it void? But even void, so long as it is conceived, is verily knowable, because of its being delineated in thought.

If people like you are unable to realize that state, then you should serve reverentially the real spiritual guide who is proficient in the realization of that state, and not, by using a term like void, according to your own judgement, throw yourself and others, in the unfathomable abyss of immense delusion. Enough of this.

How is it known that there is insentiency in that state? In reply to this, it is said, “Because etc.” Abhiyoga means declaration of the nature of reflection concerning that state made by the person who has risen from samādhi or trance in the form, “In what condition was I?” Because of the experience, Tadāsīt iti niścayaḥ i.e. “I was exceedingly in an insentient state.” Hence that state of insentiency is artificial i.e. imagined one because of its being recollected in that way. On the contrary, that state (i.e. the state of insentiency) being experienced only declares the existence of the experient, the knower who had that experience, not non-existence or void. In the state of so-called universal negation, the undivided state of cit or consciousness that is the knower decidedly abides. It is never possible to speak of its non-existence. This is what is meant to be said.

(Another objection):

Well, memory is possible only of that which has been already observed and determined, as for instance, blue etc. There can be no determination of that which is void, in which the function of the buddhi (determinative faculty) is suppressed. Then how is it said, ‘on the basis of subsequent ascertainment in the form ‘it was’ that this denotes insentiency ?

(Reply)

In reply, it is said that such is the condition only of the known or the object. So long as, through the impression retained in the Self, the known or the object is not determined by thisness, it cannot be remembered. Though limited in the imaginary states of void, etc, the knower or the subject, however, abides as the real (lit. unconventional), ultimate Reality. He cannot be separate from himself. Therefore, there is a thought determinative of him only. Thus in that state there is a knower as I. This is evident from self-experience. It is this experiencer of the void who is recollected subsequently in memory as exceedingly limited in opposition to the universe.

Hence there is no inconsistency here. As this is the exact position, therefore the state of the void is only artificial. In accordance with the declaration made in the line “therefore, when whether existent or non-existent, if it is only contemplated afterwards, it is only a product of imagination,” the state of void is brought into being only by an imaginary conception of the non-existent. The Supreme Lord himself, in order to conceal the real knowledge, shows to the fools void as a reality so that they may accept it as the goal to be achieved.

The word jñeyam (knowable) in the verse, which means the form of the knowable is used as an example to show that it is always like sound sleep.

(Summary)

This is the sense. Every one without any effort has the experience of sleep which is like insentiency. Then what is the use of another void which can be acquired only by the effort of meditation. Both are similar in point of unreality. Many philosophers like the Vedāntists, the Naiyāyikas, the followers of Sāṃkhya and Buddhists and others have fallen into this great uncrossable ocean of immense insentiency in the form of the void. Śūnya has proved to be an obstacle even to those who were desirous of entering the Spanda principle when their efforts slackened. This will be described in the verse, beginning with, “Then, in that great ether,” and ending with, “insentient like sound sleep” (I, 25). Therefore, the author’s great effort is noticed in demolishing this theory. Even though he has definitely established here that it is a position to be abandoned, he will further establish it in “The effort directed towards action” (I, 15) Hence I have made an effort to expose its defects. The worthy students, who have lent their ears to this teaching for practising it, should, therefore, not be annoyed with me.

When the defects of the Buddhists have been exposed, the defects of the Vedāntists also stand exposed, for their reasoning is similar. Therefore, nothing further is said.

Now let us turn to the subject under discussion. The Spanda-principle cannot be recollected like the void. That can never be said, with propriety, to be absent, for it is involved uniformly as the Experient in all the experiences. It has been rightly said, "Ah, by what means can one know the knower?" (B. A. U. IV, 5, 15).

Though the state of entry into Reality is remembered on account of the impression of prāṇa, etc., when one comes back to normal consciousness after meditation, the Spanda-principle is not similarly remembered. It is rather the highest Experient, the quintessence of uninterrupted light and bliss involved in all experiences.

As the author will say later, "Whether it is word, or thought, or object, there is no state which is not Śiva." (II,4). Hence this principle which is uninterrupted bliss of consciousness can never be an object of memory or a state of insentiency.

Regarding the question that this principle has been referred to by the word 'that', it must be understood that according to the statement made in Īśvarapratyabhijñā, viz., "The Self not deprived of Freedom," the word 'that' refers to the so-called experient who is not the ultimate Reality, not to the Experient who is the Absolute, Ultimate Reality. By the phrase na prati-padyate, it is said that that principle cannot be known as an object of memory.

EXPOSITION

These two verses are very important. The Mādhyamikas maintained that the Ultimate Reality is Śūnya or void in which there is neither knower, nor knowledge, nor known, i.e. neither subject nor object nor the means of knowing. That state cannot be characterized by any other term than void. How is it known that the ultimate state is only void? The Mādhyamika says, "We have an experience of it in samādhi in which there is neither consciousness of 'I' nor of this, nor of any link between the two." How is it known that there was such a state? The only reply that can be given to this question is that after the samādhi, in subsequent memory we know that there was such a state.

Three important points have been made against the Mādhyamika by the author.

Firstly, the experience of abhāva or śūnya or total absence of objectivity is mūḍhatā i.e. insentiency or stupefaction like sleep. How is this known? This is known by abhiyoga, i.e. by a backward reference in memory. But firstly, like sleep this is only a particular state of the manas. It is only a passing phase, not something eternal. It cannot be the characteristic of Reality or the Spanda-principle as such.

Secondly, since this experience is a matter of memory, therefore, also, it cannot be a characteristic of Reality or the Spanda-principle or Śiva or the Experient, the Ātmā or the Essential Self whichever way one may like to put it. For memory is a matter of recollection, and recollection is not possible without a recollector. The Spanda-principle is the recollector, not something recollected. This is what the 13th verse says

The Spanda principle is not an object to be recollected."

As Kallaṭa puts it in his vytti

“सा शून्यावस्था अतीता मम इति स्मर्यते, न च आत्मस्वभाव एषः, यस्मान्न त्वेवं चिद्रूपत्वं मूढावस्थावत् स्मर्यते, तस्य सर्वकालमनुभवितृत्वेनानुभवो नित्यो-दितत्वात् ।”

“That state of void is remembered after samādhi (trance or absorbing meditation) as a past experience. This cannot be the characteristic of the Ātmā or the Spanda-principle, for firstly Ātmā or Spanda is of the nature of consciousness, and to say that consciousness is remembered as insentiency would be contradiction in terms. Secondly, it is always the experient, the knower, the cogniser.”

Thirdly, the main point at issue, however, is not that the Mādhyamika maintains that there is an experience of void: that even the follower of Trika philosophy admits, for he believes there is a śūnya pramātā, the experient of the void. The crucial point is that the Mādhyamika maintains that śūnya or void is the characteristic of Reality, that there is no such thing even as a pramātā or the Experient.

Against this, the author of the spandakārikā has been at pains to prove two things. Firstly that the Experient is the ever-present subject; it can never be reduced to an object. It is always the vedaka (subject), not vedya (object). Secondly, that it runs like a thread through all experience; even the experience of void would not be possible without that experient. The denier even in the very denial affirms it. In the words of Śaṅkara, “The denier simply affirms the existence of ‘Ātmā’.

The Experient never takes a holiday, for without Him, no experience is possible. In the words of Kāthopaniṣad “It is the light that makes all appearance possible.”

The objector says, “You yourself have said in verse 2 that all this universe, all this objectivity remains in it and comes forth from it which means that consciousness itself assumes the form of universal objectivity. In other words, consciousness has itself, by relinquishing its nature, assumed an artificial form of negation or void. In the face of this, how do you maintain that it is uninterrupted bliss and is never insentient?

In reply to this the author says:

Verses 14, 15, 16

Of this Spanda principle, two states are spoken about, viz., of the doer or the subject and the deed or the object. Of these two, the deed or the object is subject to decay but the doer or the subject is imperishable. 14

In the samādhi of void, only the effort which is directed towards objectivity disappears. It is only a fool who, on the disappearance of that effort, thinks 'I have ceased to be'. 15

There can never be the disappearance of that inner nature which is the abode of the attribute of omniscience in the event of the non-perception of anything objective. 16

TRANSLATION

Atra in avasthāyugalaṃ cātra means spanda-principle Kāryatvaṃ kartṛtvaṃ ca śabdītam spoken of as the doer and the deed implies that the two states are differentiated only by the use of words i.e. only in speech. In reality, the two states are but one, viz. the principle of Śiva who is absolutely free and mass of light. This principle which is not in any way different from the existence of the subject or the agent being pervaded by activity or spanda in the form of light, and appearing as identical with it., assuming the form of tattva (constitutive principles), bhuvana (world) and body or their absence, etc. is called the object, because any other principle than that cannot have causality. As has been said in Īśvarapratyabhijñā:

“It is not in the power of the insentient (e.g. the seed) to bring forth anything into existence (e.g. the sprout) whether it (the sprout) be considered to be already existent in the cause or not existent in it. Therefore, the causal relation (i.e. the relation between cause and effect) is really the relation between the doer or creator and the deed or the object of creation”¹ (I. Pr. II, 4,2).

The creativity of the creator consists in the fact that by the process of uniting and separating various manifestations such as space, time, etc. he manifests innumerable things like body, blue, etc. which, though non-different from the essential nature of consciousness appear as different like reflections in a mirror (which though non-different from the mirror appear as different).

All that which He manifests is perishable as regards its external form. Its perishableness is, however, nothing else than its submergence of thisness (i.e. objectivity) and abiding as the I. Therefore, it is only the objective aspect of the subject such as the body, etc. which is manifested and withdrawn by the Lord, not the Subjective aspect which is identical with the light of the Supreme I, for even though the subject (the individual Self) has entered the body, it is identical with the Lord. Hence of the two, viz. of the objective and the subjective, the objective is perishable, the doer or the Subject who is identical with the Freedom of Consciousness is, however, imperishable, for even at the manifestation and withdrawal of the world, he does not deviate from his nature of the imperishable Subject and Creator. If he were to do so, even the manifestation and withdrawal of the world would not be perceptible. Hence, even in the state of insentiency; the Spanda principle is only Sentiency with the essence of uninterrupted bliss.

(An objection)

On the consummation of meditation on the void and in deep sleep, we do not notice its creativity, for its activity is nowhere seen in that state (How is it then that it is said to be the eternal actor or creator?) (Commentary on the author's reply contained in the 15th and 16th verse).

True, on the cessation of all work of the nature of objective perception, only the effort consisting in directing the senses, etc. towards the objects disappears. On its disappearance, only a fool, whose sense of Self or Subject is eclipsed owing to meditation on the void, thinks "I have ceased to be".

The cessation, however, of him can never be possible whose nature consists in the inner light of I-consciousness and who is, therefore, the abode of omniscience. Omniscience also implies omnipotence. No one can be found as the perceiver of the cessation of that inward nature. If any such person is found, it is just he who is the inner consciousness (that was supposed to have ceased). If no such person is found, how then can it be decided that there was ever such a state of cessation?

(Commentary on the last line of the 16th Verse) :

Moreover, nobody else feels the cessation of the subject, excepting he himself, whose nature is the light of consciousness. Then how can his cessation be asserted? Thus the phrase 'on account of the non-perception' means 'on account of the absence of the perception of another subject.'

Further, it may be said that just as the absence of jar is ascertained from the observation of the ground without the jar, even so the absence of Self may be ascertained from the observation of some one without the Self. But the existence of the perceiver of the absence of Self is unavoidable in this case. Therefore the non-existence of the perceiver of the absence of the Self cannot be established.

If on account of the cessation of the effort directed towards some object or action, the agent or director himself were to cease, then at the subsequent time there will be no perception of any body. Hence there would arise the contingency of the non-perception of any being.

Further, on account of the non-perception of another i.e. external effort during deep sleep, etc., how can the cessation of the internal principle be suspected even by blockheads, for how can the disappearance of one thing affect another. Therefore from the non-perception of another, viz., of the effect towards an object, there can never be the disappearance of the inner perceiver who is of the nature of light i.e. consciousness, for this inner nature² which is the abode of omniscience knows that state of absence also, otherwise the very state of absence cannot be proved.

The genitive case 'of another' used here conveys the sense of the nominative and the accusative.³

By the use of the expression 'in the inner,' the possible state of the subject in opposition to the object has been mentioned. In fact by the afore-said reasoning, the state of the knowership of the Subject has been stated. The expression antarmukha should be construed thus :

'Antaḥ = perfect I-ness, and mukhaṃ = chief, the whole phrase meaning, Spanda-tattva, the main characteristic of which is perfect I-ness.'

NOTES

1. Kārya-kāraṇabhāva or causality in this system actually means the kartṛ-karmatva-bhāva i.e. the relation between the creator and his object of creation, for in the final analysis, all the so-called causes derive their power from the Ultimate Agent, the Divine.

2. Rāmakaṇṭha clarifies the antarmukha-bhāva or the inner nature of the self in the following words :

“आत्मनो ज्ञानक्रियाभेदेन द्विविधा या शक्तिः सा सौषुप्ताद्यवस्थायाम् अन्तः-करणबहिष्करणव्यापारोपरमे सति, केवलस्वात्ममात्राभिमुख-ज्ञशक्तिमात्रत्वे-नावशिष्यते; तेन अन्तर्मुखो भाव इत्युक्तम् ।

“The Self has two main powers, viz. of knowledge and activity. When during deep sleep, etc., the activity of the inner and outer senses ceases, only the knowledge aspect which is turned towards the Self is prominent. That is why the expression antarmukhabhāva has been used.”

3. The nominative case would stand as ‘There is no other seer.’ The accusative case would stand as ‘अन्यं न उपलभते’ ‘There is nothing other to be seen.’

EXPOSITION

Two main arguments have been brought out in these three verses. Firstly, the Spanda-principle or the Divine appears in two aspects, viz. the subject and the object. The object is subject to decay and change; the subject is never subject to these. The Mādhyamika avers that it is not only the object that in the ultimate analysis disappears but the subject also. It is maintained by the author that the subject can never be absent, for by nature he is not subject to decay or change.

Secondly, in the meditation on the void, it is only the effort towards external objectivity that has ceased to be and therefore, it is only the object that has ceased to be. That does not prove that the subject also has ceased to be. As Rāmakaṇṭha puts it :

“अभावसमाध्यवस्थासु कार्याभावात् करणव्यापारविरतिमात्रेणात्माभाव-
भ्रान्तिरिति”

“In the meditation on the void, since there is the absence of objectivity, to conclude, on account of the cessation of the activities of the instruments (inner and outer) that there is the cessation of the Self is sheer delusion. ”

TRANSLATION

Tasya means ‘of the real nature which is the topic of this treatise; upalabdhi means ‘uninterrupted knowledge.’ The fully enlightened has, by the firm grip of the process, described that awareness in all the three states of waking, dream, and deep sleep. The fully enlightened is one who is completely free from even the residual traces of unenlightenment. Nityam (always) means “at the beginning, in the middle, and at the end.”

Avyabhicāriṇī means invariable, undeviating, unfailing. The meaning is “The fully enlightened is one whose inner nature always shines as identical with Śiva.”

Of the three states characterized by specific knowledge appropriate to them, the partially awakened one has awareness (of Spanda) only at the beginning or at the end of each state. At the beginning means ‘just when that state is about to start;’ ‘at the end’ means ‘at its cessation when the perceiver’s mind is withdrawn within.’ He does not have this awareness in the middle of each of these states which is characterised by specific knowledge appropriate to itself. It has been rightly said in Śivadṛṣṭi² “The awareness of Śivatā or real state of the Experient is observed at the beginning of all knowledge, or it is observed at the end because of the cessation of that knowledge (when the mind is withdrawn within).”

Bhaṭṭa Lollaṭa³ has also similarly explained in his commentary that that awareness exists only at the beginning and the end of each state of waking, dream, and deep sleep in the case of the partially awakened. We have not been taught to give far-fetched explanation of the clear meaning of these kārikās (verses) in accordance with the wording of the gloss of Bhaṭṭa Śrī Kallaṭa.⁴

Since the partially awakened has this awareness (of the Spanda principle) at the beginning and at the end of each state, therefore, he is fit to be fully awakened by the instruction, regarding Spanda. The author will speak about it in the verse, beginning with "Therefore, one should be on the alert for the discernment of the Spanda principle while waking (I, 21) and in "The un-enlightened one remained stupefied as one is (stupefied) in deep sleep while he who is not enveloped by (spiritual) darkness abides as the enlightened one" (I,25), similarly in the passage, beginning with, 'even in dream,' and also in 'one should always remain awakened.'

Here, for the purpose of enlightening fully the partially enlightened yogi, the instruction is given to fill even the middle state consisting of the determination of objects, with the rapturous experience of the fourth state, just as he fills with that bliss the initial and the final phases of the three states of waking, etc. This will be explained later on.

A similar view is expressed in the following in the Śiva-sūtra also :

"Even during the three different states of consciousness in waking, dreaming and profound sleep, the rapturous experience of the I-consciousness of the fourth state abides". (I, 7)

"The fourth state of Ātmic consciousness should be poured like (uninterrupted flow of) oil in the three states" (III, 20)
 "Being an enjoyer of the rapture of I-consciousness in the three states, he is verily the master of his senses." (I,7).

NOTES

1. The specific knowledge appropriate to waking is the knowledge of each object (pot, flower, etc.) which is common to all people, the knowledge dream is specific or particular only to the particular dreamer; the specific characteristic of deep sleep is only the residual traces (saṃskāra) of every one's experiences.

2. Siva-dṛṣṭi is written by Somānanda who was the great grand teacher of Abhinavagupta.

3. Bhaṭṭa Lollaṭa was a poet, a critic and a philosopher. He was a younger contemporary of Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭa. He lived in the second and third quarter of the 9th century A.D. His gloss on Spandakārikā referred to as Vivṛti by Kṣemarāja is not available.

4. Kallaṭa was a pupil of Vasugupta and flourished in 855 A.D. He wrote a gloss on Spandakārikā, called Vṛtti, which is published in the Kashmir Series of Text and Studies.

EXPOSITION

There are three categories of experients in the world: (1) the common empirical individual of the world who is completely ignorant of spiritual Reality, referred to as aprabuddha, the unawakened. He has absolutely no interest in yoga and is not yet qualified to appreciate its teaching. (2) The partially enlightened yogī who has some experience of the essential Self or Spanda tattva. He has an awareness of it in the beginning and end of waking, dreaming and profound sleep but not in the middle of any of these states; the experience of Spanda or the divine state is not perpetually present in his case. He is called prabuddha or partially enlightened. In comparison to Suprabuddha, he is also referred to as aprabuddha. He is the fit candidate for yoga, and the teachings are given for his improvement.

(3) Suprabuddha, sometimes referred to simply as prabuddha is the experient who has an integral awareness of spanda i.e. he has an uninterrupted awareness of it in all the three states, viz., waking, dreaming, and profound sleep. He needs no teaching of yoga. He has, in the evolutionary scheme, already attained the highest experience that is open to man.

The 17th verse gives a description of the second and third categories of yogīs.

TRANSLATION

The all-pervading Samkara who is one's own essential nature, possessed of the supreme power, appears predominantly to the fully enlightened in the two states of waking and dreaming in the form of knowledge and knowable in the middle of these two states and in his own essential form of Spanda principle at the initial and final stages of the knowledge. Therein (i.e. in the middle of the waking and dream states) he sees the universe, like Sadāśiva and īśvara, as his own body. In the other than these two, i.e. in sound sleep, this all-pervading principle (i.e. spanda) appears to him only as consciousness on account of the cessation of the entire gamut of objects. 'In the other than these two' (tadanyatra) refers only to sound sleep (susupti), not to both sound sleep and the fourth state, as others have interpreted, because the previously mentioned phrase 'unfailing in the three states' (in verse 17) makes the fourth state irrelevant, and also because the realization of that (spanda principle) is itself the fourth state.

The above state relates only to the fully enlightened yogī. It has not been mentioned with reference to the actual state of the common people, for in this case, the statement 'in the state other than the two, it is only pure consciousness' would get involved in inconsistency, because the deep sleep of the common folk is only of the nature of stupefaction and with reference to Śiva even waking and dream states are pure consciousness. Besides, it is out of point so far as the topic under discussion is concerned.

Henceforward upto the end of the first section, the book has to do only with the perfect enlightenment of the partially enlightened. Other commentators have not understood this fact. Readers may examine this for themselves. How far can I go on pointing this out with regard to every word?

EXPOSITION

This verse is important inasmuch as it throws brilliant light on the realization of the fully enlightened yogī.

In his case, the Spanda principle appears as knowledge (jñāna) and objects of knowledge (jñeya) in the middle of the two states of waking and dream. Even here, the knowledge and the objects of knowledge do not appear as completely external from him but as his own body, fully integrated to his I-consciousness, just as they appear to Sadāśiva and īśvara.

Then again, at the initial and final stages of jñāna in these two stages also, it is in its own essential nature that the Spanda-principle appears. In the deep sleep state, since there is complete absence of all knowables or objects, it appears, only as sheer consciousness (cinmaya).

TRANSLATION

*Guṇas*¹ i.e. sattva (harmony), rajas (motion) and tamas (inertia) which are the outcome of Prakṛti are here to be understood as having their abode in Māyā. As has been said in Svacchanda-tantra regarding the arrangement of the pillow of Māyā. "One should consider its (i.e. the pillow's) lower cover as red (symbolic of rajas), the upper cover as white (symbolic of sattva), and the middle one i.e. the pillow itself as black (symbolic of tamas). These guṇas are thus arranged." (Sv-T. II, 65). They begin with kalā and end with earth which are particular ramifications of Spanda, and their proliferations are bodies, senses and worlds and experiences like blue, pleasure etc. or in the case of yogīs, they may be considered to be bindu (light) and nāda (sound), etc. These can never stand in the way of the fully enlightened Yogi who has no future birth i.e. it is certain that they can never veil his essential nature. Because these acquire their own existence by resorting to the aforesaid generic spanda in accordance with the ascertained principle of Spanda described in the words "in which abide all objects and from which they come forth." (Sp. K. Verse 2) i.e. because they are born out of and are identical with Spanda.

As has been described in *Īśvarapratyabhijñā*² "Those powers which are jñāna, krīyā, and māyā as the third in the case of the Lord (Śiva) in respect of the objective realities which are His own limbs appear in the case of the limited, empirical individual as sattva, rajas and tamas.”

According to this, it is the Divine Consciousness-power itself which displaying itself in the triad of powers, viz., jñāna, kriyā and māyā in the stages of Sadāśiva,³ Īśvara, etc. appears owing to excess of limitation, as the body of the Lord's sport in the form of sattva, rajas and tamas. Because of this, the fully enlightened yogī, always knowing all the states of waking, dream and deep sleep as presided over by the cit-śakti which is identical with the diffusion of his own Consciousness-power, never puts himself in opposition to the particular Spanda-forms such as the guṇas, etc. and only feels himself immersed in the generic Spanda-principle.

NOTES

1. Guṇas are constitutive principles. They are sattva, rajas and tamas. Sattva is the aspect of harmony, goodness, enlightenment and sukha or pleasure. Rajas is the aspect of movement, activity and duḥkha or commotion. Tamas is the aspect of inertia and moha or dulness.

2. Īśvarapratyabhijñā was written by Utpaladeva, the great grand teacher of Kṣemarāja.

3. According to this statement, jñāna is the predominant śakti of Sadāśiva, kriyā of Īśvara and māyā of Śuddha or Sahaja Vidyā. In Pratyabhijñāhṛdayam, Kṣemarāja has mentioned ichhā as the predominant śakti of Sadāśiva, jñāna of Īśvara and kriyā of Śuddha Vidyā.

EXPOSITION

There are two aspects of Spanda viz., sāmānya, and viśeṣa. Sāmānya is the general principle or power of cit or Consciousness; Viśeṣa is the manifestation of Spanda in particular constitutive aspects like sattva, rajas, tamas etc. or objective experiences like blue, pleasure, etc.

Ordinary people considering these particular manifestations of Spanda as something entirely different from Consciousness get entangled in them, but the fully enlightened yogī or Supra-buddha, considering them only as forms of Spanda, the ultimate Consciousness-Power is not befuddled.

TRANSLATION

Aprabuddadhiyah means all those worldly people who have not recognised their spanda principle which is divine śakti (power), and who consider their bodies as the Self and also all those partially awakened yogis who consider prāṇa, etc. as their Self.

The word 'etc' i.e. 'these' of the verse refers to the particular emanations of Spanda beginning with guṇas' (of the previous verse).

Svasthanisthaganodyatāḥ means always intent on veiling their real nature which is spanda principle. *Duruttāre ghore saṃsāra-vartmani pātayanti*¹ means they push the whole lot of creatures into the miserable transmigratory existence from which it is difficult for their directors to pull them out.

As has been said in Śrī Mālinī Vijaya Tantra :

“The non supreme ones (aparāḥ) are called ghoratarī śaktis who while they embrace the Rudra souls, push down and down those jīvas (empirical souls) who cling to objects of sense.” (M.V. III, 31).

Thus that very supreme power (parā-śakti) which has been previously described as of the nature of Spanda is called *Vāmeśvari*² śakti because she manifests both internally and externally and because she has to do with the contrary course of the world.³ By her are brought into being four groups of divinities known as Khecarī, Gocarī, Dikcarī, and Bhūcarī who lead the fully awakened soul to the highest stage, but drive the unawakened ones to lower and lower paths.

Thus those very Khecarī śaktis, moving in the ether of knowledge become, in the case of the fully enlightened ones, means of non-difference, omnipotence, omniscience, perfection and all-pervasiveness because of their being beyond the influence of time, while in the case of the unawakened ones, they make them move in the stage of the experient of the void and remaining there as cloaks become the means of the limitation of time, limited efficacy, limited knowledge, attachment, and limitation in respect of space and cause (i. e. niyama or niyati). So far as Gocarī is concerned, the word 'go' means speech. This implies those stages which make use of speech, viz., buddhi, the determinative faculty, ahaṁkāra, the ego-sense, and manas, the ideating faculty. They move in these stages (caranti), and bring about in the case of the fully enlightened ones, such determination, ego sense and ideation as bring about the sense of non-difference with the essential Self, while in the case of the unawakened ones, they bring about determination, etc. only of difference. Dikcarī are those śaktis which move about in the sphere of the ten external senses. In the case of the fully enlightened ones, they are sources of the manifestation of non-duality, while in the case of the unenlightened ones, they are the causes of duality.

The word bhū denotes the stage of knowables (objects), viz. the pentad of form, etc. Moving about in this sphere, and being their fully developed forms, they became congealed and thus identical with them. They reveal themselves to the fully enlightened in the form of the light of consciousness, while in the case of others, they appear in the form of limitedness all round.

Thus these four groups of Śaktis, viz., Khecarī in the form of experients, Gocarī in the form of the psychic apparatus, Dikcarī in the form of the external senses, and Bhūcarī in the form of objects which are full of particular forms of Spanda in the form of guṇas, etc. throw the worldly people of unenlightened intellect and the partially enlightened yogīs who are satisfied only with the experience of light (bindu), and sound (nāda) into the world which is only an expansion of those particular elements.

NOTES

1. Mālinī Vijaya Tantra mentions three śaktis that operate in individual souls: (1) ghoratarī who help the Rudra souls who are not attached to objects of sense, and push down and down those souls that are attached to objects of sense. They are known as aparā (non-supreme), (2) ghorā those who bring about attachment to fruits of karma and are thus an obstacle in the path of liberation. They are known as parāparā, (3) Aghorā- who lead to the state of Śiva. They are known as parā (supreme).

2. Internally she brings about the sense of abheda or non-difference; externally, she brings about the sense of bheda or difference.

3. Vāmeśvarī. There are two explanations of the word Vāmeśvarī. The word vāma means (1) left, reverse, contrary and (2) beautiful. According to the first meaning, she is called Vāmeśvarī, because she has to do with the contrary course of saṃsāra which is full of bheda or difference. According to the second meaning, she is called Vāmeśvarī, because she manifests the world which is beautiful expression of Śiva.

In Spandasandoha, Kṣemarāja gives the following explanation of Vāmeśvarī:

यत् वमन्ति विश्वं भेदाभेदमय भेदसारं च, गृणन्ति उच्चैर्गिरन्ति च भेदसारं,
भेदाभेदमयं च अभेदसारम् आपादयन्ति इति संसारवामाचाराः वामाः शक्तयः
तासाम् ईश्वरी स्वामिनी ।

Khecari, Dikcari, etc. are Vāmā Śaktis pertaining to the world, because they project the world full of difference and identity in differences, declare it as full of difference, and in the case of yogis bring about this world full of both difference and identity to a state of pure identity. The presiding deity of these Vāmā śaktis is called Vāmeśvarī.

EXPOSITION

The particular forms of Spanda attract those people who are not awakened to their divine source. There are various śaktis (powers) who preside as divinities over the particular forms of Spanda. They push down those who deny any divine origin of life and obstinately cling to sensuous pleasure, while they help those in their spiritual journey in whom a higher sense of values has dawned.

The Śaktis push them down to mundane existence, because they always think of their Self as some thing material and not as pure Consciousness. So material existence is their proper place.

He, who is always on the alert for the discernment of the Spanda principle which has been already described and which will be described further, attains, in short time, his essential nature which is the same as Śaṅkara even in the state of waking,¹ if, as has been said in the Gītā, “Those who merging their mind in me, always united with me, wait upon me” (Bh. Gītā, XII, 2), he is always intent on the close observation of the inner (divine) nature.²

Thus his inner nature, which is Śaṅkara, itself emerges before him by which the awakened one, by the attainment of ever-present absorption in it, becomes fully enlightened (supra-buddha), and becomes liberated while living.

NOTES

1. Not only in the state of meditation but also when he is actively engaged in the hum-drum routine of life in the waking condition.

2. This means the constant awareness of the divine.

EXPOSITION

The mind of those who have constant awareness of the Divine is transformed by the mysterious alchemic force present within and thus they acquire Integral Divine Consciousness. Utpala-bhaṭṭa adds that the discernment referred to should be practised in the following way:

अहं शुद्धबोधैकरूपो जगच्चेदं मत्स्फार एव ।

“I am only pure Consciousness: this world is only a glorious manifestation of myself”.

TRANSLATION

In all the ways of approach to the Divine, the yogīs are established in one-pointed concentration after having allayed all the other mental activities. But in these states of vehement anger etc. all the other activities of the mind cease by themselves without any effort on the part of the yogīs, and (in such crucial moments) if the yogīs who are always on the alert (for grasping the Spanda principle) instantly become introverted, they attain their desired object (viz., Spanda principle) instantaneously. The purport is that those who are not yogīs remain only stupefied (in these states).

Atikruddhaḥ, or the greatly exasperated suggests the group of energies becoming introverted under the influence of the goddess ‘wishing to destroy’ appearing at once after seeing an enemy who has inflicted a terrible wound only a short while before or hearing various heart-rending words of the enemy. Praḥṣṭa (overjoyed) betokens, after the sight of the beloved with moon-like face longed for since long, the entire group of the senses stimulated and running after her, under the influence of the ‘goddess of intense longing’ emerging at that very moment. Kim karomi—‘what am I to do’ implies a person, encompassed all round by a force of strong desperadoes intent on murder, reflecting-‘in which direction may I turn’, ‘what am I to do’?, thrust in a state of uncertainty, with his mental activities suspended on account of rising uncertainty because of all hopes of help being shattered. Dhāvan ‘Running for life’ denotes one who is attacked by a furious elephant in rut and runs without any regard for his body, and is engaged in a very hasty flight under the influence of ‘the goddess of exertion’ in full activity, with all other mental activities withdrawn within himself. In this way in all other similar conditions such as great fear generated by the sight of a lion or python, when the yogī being always on the alert for discerning the Spanda principle, is reduced to any such state in which his other mental activities come to a dead stop, then in that state in which all other mental activities cease, Spanda is established, that is the Spand principle is turned towards him.

Therefore, considering carefully the cessation of all other mental activities, instantly allaying the states of anger, uncertainty within him, by the device of the tortoise contracting all its limbs within (On the occasion of fear) or by expanding his state of joy, running etc. he should contemplate on the Spanda energy which has manifested itself before him. As has been said in Vijñānabhairava:

“If one succeeds in immobilizing his mind (in making it one-pointed) when he is under the sway of desire, anger, greed, infatuation, arrogance and envy, then the Reality underlying these states alone subsists” (Verse 101). “On the occasion of a great delight being obtained, or on the occasion of delight arising from seeing a friend or relative after a long time, one should meditate on the delight itself and become absorbed in it, then his mind will become identified with it.” (verse 71).

“At the commencement and end of sneeze, in terror, in sorrow, in the condition of a deep sigh or on the occasion of flight from (the attack of) an elephant, during (keen) curiosity, at the commencement or end of hunger, the state of brahman approaches near” (Verse 118).

EXPOSITION

In tense emotional experience, whether of anger, joy, fear or acute mental impasse, all the extroverted mental activities come to a dead stop. We are unable to grasp the inner Reality because of the whirligig of imagination and thought. It is only when this whirligig stops, when the mind is stilled that we are in a fit condition to have an experience of Reality or the Spanda principle, if we are properly oriented towards it. Yogīs, mystics practise meditation in order to put a stop to all restless mental activities, but intense emotional experiences, of themselves, bring the squirrel-like activities of the mind to a dead halt. That is the psychological moment for catching the vibration of the inner Reality, the Divine Spanda, if one is properly introverted to be blessed with its vision. This opportunity is not open to all; it is open only to those who are eagerly waiting for its reception. That is why Kṣemarāja gives the following: warning : एतास्वतिक्रोधाद्यवस्थासु स्वरसत एव समस्तापरवृत्तिक्षयमयीषु यदि स्पन्दतत्त्वविवक्तये सततमुद्युक्ता झटित्यन्तर्मुखी भवन्ति योगिनस्तत्समीहितमचिरेणैव लभन्ते । अयोगिनस्त्वन्न मूढा एव ।

“In all these intense emotional states of vehement anger, etc. all other mental activities cease of themselves. If the yogīs who are always on the alert for the discernment of the Spanda principle instantly become introverted at that psychological moment, they will achieve their desired object instantaneously; the non-yogīs even in these states will remain stupefied and bewildered.”

Rāmakaṇṭha in his vivṛti makes the position clear by the following significant remark:

एताश्च प्रबुद्धस्य प्रत्यवमृश्यमानाः सद्यः प्रतिष्ठितस्पन्दोपलब्ध्युपायतां भजन्ते, न तु अनुभूयमानाः । सा हि अवस्था दुःखादिमय्येव । (p. 74)

“These emotional states serve, to the awakened one, as a means for realizing the abiding Spanda if they throw him into a reflective recollection of his essential I-consciousness, not if they involve him in their own experience. The experience of these states is only one of pleasure or pain.”

The author now teaches that one, who is always on the alert first of all, closely observes the Spanda energy in all these states by the technique already described, and afterwards by constant awareness of that in all the states obtains liberation in life which, in other words, is the realization of its permanent presence (lit., impenetration into its firmness).

Taking firm hold of that (i.e. spanda) the awakened Yogī remains firm with the resolution "I will surely carry out whatever it will tell me". Resting on the experience of that Spanda, both prāṇa (sūrya) and apāna (candra) get merged in the suṣumnā and by the upward path of Suṣumnā they rise up to the great ether of universal consciousness by abandoning the sphere of the body together with the Brahmarandhra and are completely dissolved in it. There the unenlightened yogī by considering that state a kind of deep sleep remains stupefied, while the one who is not covered with the darkness of infatuation is established in that ether of universal consciousness and abides as fully enlightened. 23, 24, 25.

TRANSLATION

‘Ayam’ (‘this’) means ‘my essential Self which is of the nature of Śaṅkara’. Whatever the previously experienced nature, viz., consciousness-bliss i.e. my essential Self will tell me, i.e. will admonish, that will I surely carry out. i.e. leaving extroverted attitude I will be devoted to it. Samkalpya means ‘having resolved thus’. Yāṃ samālambya means ‘holding on to that spanda state which was previously experienced as consciousness bliss in the state of vehement anger, etc.’ Samālambya also implies ‘having decided that it is a goal worth achieving’. Tiṣṭhati (lit., stands remains) implies that ‘laying to rest all thought-constructs, he resorts to a state of the absence of thought-constructs (avikalpaṃ) firmly’. The sūrya and candra i.e. prāṇa and apāna meeting in the stage of hṛdaya (centre of the body) and being merged together in the channel of Suṣumnā which is otherwise called Brahmanāḍī, journeying by the upper i.e. the udāna route, get dissolved in the great ether of consciousness, abandoning the sphere of the body presided over by Brahmā who specially presides over Brahmarandhra. They leave the entire range of the body right up to the gate high up. Thus they get perfectly dissolved in the great ether of consciousness which transcends the entire range of the body and in which the entire objective reality is completely dissolved. The yogī who has even attained to the stage of the great ether of consciousness, if he is slack in his efforts, being deluded by the particular emanations of Spanda such as guṇas, etc. in the form of Khecarī and other śaktis, experiences it like deep sleep, and thus remains stupefied, because his essential nature is not fully expressed. Therefore, he is called mūḍha or the deluded one. The word sauṣupta (deep sleep) implies dream also, so this yogī experiences only the state of void, etc. as one does in dream or deep sleep.

As has been said by Śrī Bhaṭṭa Kallaṭa (in his Vṛtti)

“Resorting to which state of Spanda” and, “That unawakened yogī who has not fully realized his essential nature, being deluded by dream etc. is held back (from the state of the great ether of consciousness)”.

He, however, who by the intensity of effort and the force of exertion, does not become slack even for a moment, is called prabuddha i.e. suprabuddha- fully enlightened, and as he is not overcome by the darkness of delusion, he abides as identical with the ether of consciousness.

Therefore, the revered teacher has enjoined that the yogī should always make strenuous endeavour. May there be good for all.

Thus ends the first section of the commentary, Spandanirṇaya, dealing with Spanda which is one's essential nature written by Ācārya Kṣemarājānaka, devotee of the great Lord.

EXPOSITION

When the yogī catches hold of the Spanda principle, his prāṇa and apāna get merged in Suṣumnā, they mount up by the path of suṣumnā even beyond Brahmarandhra and get dissolved in the great ether of consciousness. At such an occasion, the yogī who is not fully awakened and is not on the alert is simply stupefied, while the yogī who is fully awakened is not covered with infatuation by that wonderful experience.

TRANSLATION

Thus, in the first section, the author has first described with significant hint the Spanda principle which is one's own essential Self which is conformable to reasoning, and which can be recognized by nimilana samādhi and as he has indicated before how complete enlightenment can come by being constantly united with that essential Self, so now he is going to describe the universality of the same spanda principle recognizable by unmilana-samādhi and ascertainable by reasoning. In the second section consisting of seven verses, beginning with 'having recourse to it' and ending with 'bringing about identity with Śiva', and entitled 'the rise of innate knowledge' which reveals identity with consciousness everywhere.

The universe is twofold—pure and impure.¹ The first two verses of this section tell us that the pure ones emanate from that Spanda principle, are identical with it and finally get merged in it. The next two verses say that the impure ones are also of the same stuff. Another verse says that one who is firmly established in the experience of that principle is liberated in life. The next two verses say that by the realization of this principle alone the practisers of yoga achieve their desired object. This is the summary of this section.

NOTES

1. The Suddha universe consists of 1. Mantra. 2. Mantreśvara, 3. Mantra-Maheśvara, 4. Śiva, and 5. Śakti. The asuddha universe consists of Māyā down to Pṛthvī tattva.

Introduction to the 1st and 2nd verse

Now the subject is being explained. In 1,2, it has been said, "in whom this universe rests and from whom it has come forth." The pure aspect of the universe consisting of Mantra and others arises from that principle only, is manifest by its force, and is merged in that only. The author describes this fact by means of an example which has already been explained in the first section.

Resorting to that power (of Spanda-tattva), the divinities, Mantra etc. together with the sacred formulae which serve as their indicators, being endowed with the power of omniscience proceed to carry out their assigned functions towards the embodied ones just as the senses of the embodied ones by resorting to the power of Spanda proceed to carry out their (specific) functions. 1.

Freed of all limitations of office after having performed their assigned duties, (nirañjanāḥ), their denotation as particular deities having ceased (śāntarūpāḥ) they get dissolved together with the mind of their devotees in that very Spanda principle. Hence they are of the nature of Śiva. 2.

TRANSLATION

Tad balam means ‘that power or energy or vitality of Spanda.’ ‘Ākrāmya.’ means ‘laying hold of it as support’ because of their being identical with it, Mantrāḥ means gods Anantabhaṭṭāraka, Vyomavyāpins, etc. Sarvajñabala-sālināḥ means ‘having full play by the power of omniscience.’ Adhikārāya dehīnām pravartante means ‘proceed to carry out their assigned functions of manifestation, withdrawal, veiling, grace, etc. in respect of the limited souls (jīvas).’ The word ‘omniscient’ (sarvajña) has been used in the sense of abstract noun, i.e. in the sense of ‘omniscience’ (sarvajñatva) and implies also omnipotence, etc (sarvakartṛtva, etc). ‘As the senses operate in manifesting objects by obtaining the power of that Spanda in the manner (already) described’ (in I.6). This is the example (given).

Freed of all limitations of office, after having done their duties, (nirañjanāḥ).¹ and their denotation as particular deities having ceased (śānta rūpā) or in the case of sacred formulae the specific words which were used to indicate them having come to an end, they are dissolved in the strength of that very spanda principle.

In Sampraliyante the affix ‘śam’ means samyagabhedāpattyā i.e. by attaining complete identity, the affix pra means prakarṣeṇāpunarāvṛtyā i.e. ‘intensely’ or in other words ‘without ever returning to their previous state,’ liyante means ‘are freed of the limitations of their office, Saha ārādhakacittena means ‘with the knowledge of the people who were devoted to them.’²

As has been said in Mālinīvijaya tantra :

“After conferring grace on the aggregate of jīvas (limited experients), they are gone to the state in which there is no longer any trouble.” (M. V. I. 41).

As Mantras, Mantreśvaras, etc., emanate from that only (i. e. the Spanda principle), have come forth from that, and are dissolved only in that, therefore, they have the nature of Śiva i.e. they are one in essence with the generic spanda principle.

(An objection)

Well, the senses and Mantras equally arise from that (the Spanda principle), how is it that the senses do not have the power of omniscience, etc.?

(Reply) :

The Lord forms by His Māyāśakti the bodies and the senses which are full of difference. By His Śakti of Śuddha Vidyā, He forms mantras out of wonderful expressive śaktis (vācaḥ) which are of the nature of the ether of consciousness add thus non-different from the Lord.

The words used as mantras do not transgress the stage of the experient (pramātr) even at the Māyic stage and have no limitation in knowledge like the body, puryaṣṭaka, etc. Therefore their omniscience is perfectly justifiable. This is in accordance with what has been said in Īśvarapratyabhijñā in the following verse :—

“The ascertainment (adhyavasā) expressed in the form ‘this is a jar’ is the power of the Highest Lord beyond name and form. It always shines as one with ‘I’ (Self) and never as this (I, 5, 20). This matter has been explained at length in the commentary on the following verse of Īśvarapratyabhijñā “The power of Māyā shows itself in manifesting undiluted diversity etc.” (III. 1. 8)

Thus this should be explained in the above manner with reference to Anantabhaṭṭāraka, etc. who abiding in the stage of suddhā vidyā bring about manifestation etc. (Another interpretation of the above verses) :

All the mantras serving as means of the ācāryas (teachers) who are occupied with initiation³ resorting to the power of the Spanda principle i.e. laying hold of it as their life-giver proceed with the mind of the devotees for performing the function of liberation and enjoyment, and after their bodies of articulate sound cease to exist, and are hence purified, they are completely dissolved i.e. they rest (in that Spanda principle). In this explanation the phrase ‘with the mind of the devotees’ should be joined with the previous stanza.

Thus it is meant to be said that the spanda principle is the substratum of the mantras not only in their stages of manifestation and dissolution but also as regards their functioning. Thus in all the ten, eighteen divisions⁴ of the Śaiva śāstras, the Spanda principle has been declared to be the quintessence of the mantras.

NOTES

1. According to Abhinavagupta, nirañjanāḥ means ‘na añjyante prakāṣṭkriyante (prameyarūpeṇa) iti nirañjanāḥ’ i.e.

those which can never be known as objects are nirañjanāḥ.' The mantras are full of I-consciousness; therefore they are always as subjects and can never be reduced to the category of objects.

2. Sahārādhaka-cittena : Rāmakaṇṭha explains this as follows: 'तस्यां दशायामभिसन्ध्युपाधि-विरहात् स्वाभाविकमात्रावशेषं यत् साधक-चित्तं तेन सह' । (p. 83). In that state, the mind of the devotee is in its original state, as the purpose for which he resorted to the mantra has already been fulfilled. It is with such a mind of the devotee that the mantra gets dissolved in Spanda.

But a deeper meaning is that the limited knowledge of the devotee is dissolved; it is now transformed into higher consciousness.

3. There are four kinds of initiation in the Śaiva system, viz., (1) Sāmayika dikṣā in which the guru initiates the disciple into the traditional rules of conduct which he has to observe, (2) putraka dikṣā in which the disciple is adopted as the successor of the guru after his death, (3) Sādhaka dikṣā in which the guru initiates the disciple into the mysteries of yoga, (4) Ācārya dikṣā in which the disciple is initiated for becoming a guru.

4. There are three main schools of Śaiva thought, viz., (1) Śiva tantra, (2) Rudra tantra and (3) Bhairava tantra. (1) Śiva tantra has ten divisions. They all teach bheda or duality (difference). (2) Rudra tantra has eighteen divisions. They teach bhedābheda, unity in diversity. (3) Bhairava tantra has sixty-four divisions. They teach abheda-non-duality or non-difference.

EXPOSITION

Kṣemarāja has explained the word mantrāḥ occurring in verse 1 in two ways, viz., the deities Mantra, Mantrēśvara and Mantramahēśvara and also mantras as sacred formulae to be recited by devotees. Both derive their power from the Spanda principle in its generic sense, and both are dissolved finally in the generic Spanda.

Rāmakaṇṭha and Utpalabhaṭṭa have taken the word mantrāḥ only in the sense of sacred formulae to be recited by devotees.

TRANSLATION

Thus having described that the manifestation consisting of Mantra, Mantrēśvara, etc. considered as pure is of the nature of Śiva, the author is now going to explain that the manifestation considered as impure also consisting of the form of Māyā, etc. is of the nature of Śiva Himself. Thus he suggests the esoteric view of Śrīmataśāstra, etc.

Since the limited individual Self is identical with the whole universe, inasmuch as all entities arise from him, and because of the knowledge of all subjects, he has the feeling of identity with them all, hence whether in the word, object or thought, there is no state which is not Śiva. It is the experient himself who, always and everywhere, abides in the form of the experienced i.e. it is the Divine Himself who is the essential Experient, and it is He who abides in the form of the universe as His field of experience.

TRANSLATION

Since the experient constitutes the whole universe like Śiva, therefore there is no state whether it is the beginning or the middle or the end and whether it is word, or object, or ideation i.e. thought etc. which is not Śiva. The sense is that every thing is Śiva. Since it is thus, therefore the experient himself who is of the form of consciousness that abides wholly i.e. neither less nor more in the form of the experienced, such as the body, blue etc. always and everywhere, i.e. in all the diverse stages of tattva (categories), bhuvana (worlds) etc. The experienced is nothing different from the experient.

Since this teaching begins with jīva (experient), and ends with Śiva, it teaches by way of suggestion that there is no essential difference between jīva and Śiva, that is to say, one should not regard oneself as imperfect in any state like body, etc., rather he should consider himself as of the nature of Śiva who is a compact mass of consciousness.

As has been said in *Śrī Pratyabhijñā-ṭīkā*¹

“Even those who perceive the body consisting of thirtysix categories in the form of Śiva and treat it with respect acquire spiritual perfection and also those, who investing even jar, etc. with the form of Śiva perceive it in that light and honour it (will acquire spiritual perfection). There is no difference of opinion on this point.”

Bhaṭṭa Śrī Vāmana² has also said,

“As all objects are known only when they rest on Consciousness, as support, not by themselves, therefore all things exist only as known. So one should identify himself with Consciousness.”

How is it known that the experient is identical with the whole? In reply to this query, it is said that the reason is because he is the origin or cause of the production of all entities.³ The ablative case samudbhavāt has been used in an abstract sense i.e. in the sense of sumudbhavatvāt i.e. in the sense of ‘being the cause of all productions.

Thy sport becomes in this world the cause of the diversity of the knower, knowing, knowledge and the knowable. Since on thy play being over, that diversity disappears somewhere,³ thou art seldom seen in that light and only by some.”⁴ In accordance with the view expressed in the above hymn of Śrī Jñānagarbha,⁵ the jīva is the source of all entities, because the existence of the world comes about only on the prevalence of consciousness. Since the universe emanates only from the jīva, therefore, he constitutes the whole and has all powers. This has been conclusively discussed in my commentary on the second verse. Another reason for the jīva being declared as identical with the whole is given in the second half of the first verse above in the phrase “because of the knowledge of all” i.e. the jīva is known as identical with all, because he is identical with the knowledge of the whole in the form of blue, pleasure, etc.

Since by means of these two verses, the secret practices and the teachings of wisdom brought about by reasoning which serves to uproot the tree of all differences have been suggested, by the first and the last verses, of I Section *mahārtha tattva*⁶ the great Reality, by the verse Jāgradādivibhede’pi (I, 3) the highest truth of the Trika system and by the verse tadākramya the quintessence of all worship has been suggested, therefore, all instructions are acknowledged to be imparted by Spanda principle only.

NOTES

1. This ṭikā was written by Utpaladeva himself. It is not available now.
2. There have been many writers in Kashmir by this name. It is not known to whom Kṣemarāja is referring here.
3. Somewhere i.e. in thyself in the state of saṃhāra or withdrawal.
4. By some i.e. by those who have received thy grace.
5. The writer of this has not yet been traced.
6. Mahārtha tattva refers to the krama system.

EXPOSITION

Two important points have been stressed in these two verses. Firstly, the individual is identical with total reality. The reason is that through knowledge (saṃvedana) he knows every thing.

Therefore through knowledge he feels his identity with the all-of-reality. As he becomes identified with the whole of Reality, he becomes in the words of Kṣemarāja viśvaśakti 'universal power,' and thus all objects are said to arise from him.

Secondly, as he feels his identity with all, there is no state which is not Śiva to him. Therefore, the difference between the experient and the experienced disappears for him.

TRANSLATION

The author now points out that it is the quintessence of the realization of one's identity with the whole universe that constitutes liberation (mokṣa).

TRANSLATION

Or he, who has this realization (viz. identity of his Self with the whole universe), being constantly united with the Divine, views the entire world as the play (of the Self identical with Śiva), and is liberated while alive. There is no doubt about this.

TRANSLATION

By the use of the word vā (or), the author means to suggest that the means of nimilana-samādhi described in the first section is optional, but this realization (of identity with the universe) is essential and difficult to acquire. Hence the sense of the verse is as follows.

Such realization is difficult to acquire and is attained by some such person as has no future birth. He views the whole world as play and by evolution (unmeṣa) and involution (nimeṣa) manifests or withdraws it. As has been said in the Bhagavadgītā, “Having mentally entered in me, those who are always united with me and wait upon me” (Bh-Gītā XII.2) the great yogi has his consciousness always absorbed in the Universal Consciousness, and even while he is living i.e. even while he is exercising the act of maintaining prāṇa, his entire bondage is burnt to ashes, by the fire of spiritual knowledge and after the fall of the body, he abides as Śiva Himself. Even while living, such a person is indeed liberated and can never suffer bondage.

By the phrase ‘there is no doubt,’ the author suggests that by initiation, liberation comes about by faith in the guru (the spiritual guide), but by such knowledge and conduct, it comes about by one’s own experience.

TRANSLATION

It is declared here that 'one should worship Śiva by becoming Śiva'. That alone constitutes the manifestation of the object of meditation in the mind of the meditator which leads to the realization of identity with the object of meditation. Dhyāyinaścetaśi means in the mind of the meditator, Tasya means 'of the object of meditation' i.e. 'of the nature of Śiva' as described in 'there is no state which is not Śiva,' or 'of the particular deity of mantra who is the cause of the attainment of some object.' Ayameva udayaḥ means 'this is its manifestation,' which brings about identity of the meditator whether he is a sādhaka or *ācārya*¹ with that (i.e. with the object of meditation) in accordance with what is described in 'in word, object or thought, there is no state which is not Śiva' (II 4) Tadātmataḥ samāpattiḥ means 'identity with Śiva', not the perception of some separate form such as the five-headed deity. Ichchataḥ means 'not simply by determination, but rather by one who is steeped in the will—which is not an idea—of becoming one with Śiva who is the Self of all'.

This is what is meant to be said. "Because everything is associated with this non-dual light (i.e. the Spanda principle), which is the deity of the mantra contemplated that will not appear before him whose resolute will is 'I am Śiva, of compact mass of consciousness and bliss, and the whole universe is my body', which arises from the realization of identity with the awareness of that and which is the result of non-ideation² alone."

As has been said by my great grand teacher³ "O Lord, in this whole world which is thy own manifest form, what is that spot which is not a holy place to thy devotees and where the mantras of these devotees will not bear fruit"? (U.Sto I,4).

This alone is his great accomplishment that he acquires the ambrosia of the highest non-duality. The implication of the word 'eva' (alone, only) is that with any other kind of ambrosia, though it may provide stability to the body for some time, the death of the aspirant is inevitable (ultimately). Thus from this point of view, everywhere in Svachchanda tantra in the chapter dealing with the acquisition of ambrosia from a gross point of view, it begins with the statement, "Never by acquisition of ambrosia can there be victory over death which is brought about by time," and in the relevant context based on the experience of Sahaja (sahaja sandarbheṇa) with the mode of acquisition of the real ambrosia in terms of praise in the following words:

"Or one established in the supreme principle is not harassed by all forms of Time."

In the middle, it says:

"One should regard everything as of the form of Śiva and Śakti and finally it says 'One who has always this conviction is liberated while living. Time can never throttle him who always contemplates on Śiva. The yogi functioning freely by means of *Svacchanda yoga*⁴ is united with the status of *Svacchanda*⁵ and acquires equality with Svacchanda. He becoming Svacchanda moves about freely, and enjoys full Freedom" (Svacch. (VII, 258)

This, indeed, is the realization of Self. In the statement. "The Self should be realized," what is meant is the recognition of the Self as Śiva who is omniscient, omnipotent and fully free, and not the Self mentioned by the Vedantist in the line, "All this is verily Puruṣa"⁶ (Śvet. III 15) The sacred text also says, "All those votaries of Self⁷ do not reach the highest stage" (Sv. IV, 388).

On the occasion of initiation for the purpose of uniting (the Self of the disciple with the universal consciousness), the impartation of this knowledge is the favour conferred on the disciple. The ācārya (teacher) having a knowledge of this attainment justifies his title of ācārya by uniting the Self of the disciple to Śiva. This is the initiation for liberation confirmed by one's personal realization which gives to *putraka*⁸ etc. the knowledge of the highest nature of Śiva. As has been said:

"He who thus knows in reality has his certain initiation which bestows liberation without the oblation with sesamum and ghee (clarified butter)", (P.Tri, 25)

Sacerdotal initiation is also initiation. In order that any one may not lose faith in sacerdotal initiation, the chief great teacher⁹ has not used the word eva (alone) here (i.e. in the description of Nirvāṇa—dīkṣā). May there be good to all.

Here ends the second section entitled Sahajavidyodayaspanda of Spanda-nirṇaya written by Kṣemarājānaka, the devotee of the great Lord.

NOTES

1. Vide Note No. 2 on the first two verses of this section.
2. The author means to say that this realization does not come by way of ideation, but of will.
3. This refers to Utpaladeva.
4. Svacchanda yoga—This means union with Svātantrya, the Divine I-consciousness which is the quintessential nature of Śiva.
5. Svacchanda—the absolute Free Will of Bhairava.
6. By puruṣa in the above quotation, the Vedantist does not mean the 25th Puruṣa tattva as Kṣemarāja thinks, but Ātmā, the Divine Consciousness.
7. According to Trika philosophy, 'ātma-vyāpti' or realization of Self is not the highest ideal. It is Śivavyāpti, viz., the realization of both the Self and the universe as Śiva which is the highest ideal.
8. Vide note No. 2 on the first two verses of this section.
9. This refers to Vasugupta, the author of Spandakārikā.

EXPOSITION

The second section has been rightly entitled Sahajavidyodaya i.e., the rise of Sahaja vidyā. Sahaja or Śuddha vidyā is that state in which in spite of the seeming difference of all that is earth, earthy, there is a running sense of unity, identity, of the Supreme I-consciousness fused with the all-of-reality. As Vasugupta puts it,

“तस्मात् शब्दार्थचिन्तासु न सावस्था न या शिवः”

“Whether it is word or thought or object there is no state which is not Śiva.”

In the first section, the emphasis is on the Self-realization or in the technical language of this system on ātmavyāpti on the realization of Self as Śiva. In the second section, the emphasis is on the realization of the universe as Śiva or in the technical language of this system on Śiva-vyāpti.

From the point of view of yoga, the emphasis in the first section is on nimlana-samādhi, on introversive meditation, on taking a plunge mentally in the innermost Self and realizing it as Śiva. In the second section, the emphasis is on unmmlana samādhi or extroversive meditation in which in spite of the senses being open to the onset of external sensation, the world appears as the materialization of the bliss of Śiva. Kṣemarāja rightly calls it mahāsamāpatti, the coup of supreme realization.

In the two concluding verses of the section, the author depicts, in beautiful words, the mystic significance of the spiritual praxis of the seeker in the light of the rise of Sahaja vidyā.

The aspirant meditates over mantra in order that the deity embodied in the mantra may manifest himself or herself to him. The author says that the realization on the part of the seeker, of his identity with Śiva is alone the manifestation of the deity for which he has been spending days and nights of vigil.

Man has been in search of ambrosia that will make him immortal. The author says that the realization of one's identity with Śiva is alone the real ambrosia, for it sets one free from the whirligig of birth and death.

The aspirant subjects himself to a tedious ceremony of initiation (dikṣā) for liberation (nirvāṇa). The author says that which gives the realization of identity with Śiva is alone the real initiation for liberation. Utpalabhaṭṭa quotes the following verse as a definition of dikṣā:

ददाति ज्ञानसद्भावं क्षपयत्यखिलं मलम् ।

बोधानुबेधाद्दीक्षोक्ता दानक्षपणधर्मिणी ॥

Dikṣā is that which gives realization and destroys all impurities. Because it imparts that realization which awakens one from the sleep of ignorance, therefore is it called dikṣā. It has the characteristic of both giving (dī) and destroying (kṣā)”.

III SECTION

Summary of the 3rd Section

एवं निमीलनोन्मीलनसमाधिद्वयसमाधये उभयविसर्गारणीभूतः सुप्रबुद्धताभिव्यक्तये स्पन्दतत्त्वसमावेशो निःष्यन्दद्वयेन निर्णीतः । अथेदानीमेतदवष्टम्भाभ्यासेन परापरविभूत्युदयो भवतीत्यभिधाय संक्षेपेण बन्धमोक्षस्वरूपं निरूप्य प्रथमोपक्रान्तं निगमयति—यथेच्छेत्यादिभिः चक्रेश्वरो भवेदित्यन्तरेकोनविंशत्या श्लोकरनेन विभूतिस्पन्दाख्येन तृतीयनिःष्यन्देन । तत्र श्लोकद्वयेन जाग्रत्सिद्धस्वातन्त्र्यदृष्टान्तपुरःसरं स्वप्नस्वातन्त्र्यम् । एकेन तद्विपर्ययमभिदधता सततोद्युक्ततैवाश्रयणीयेति तात्पर्येणोक्तम् । द्वितयेनाभीष्टवस्तुज्ञानाविर्भावः । एकेन कर्तृशक्त्याविर्भूतिः क्षुधादिजयश्च । एकेन सर्वज्ञताप्राप्तिः । एकेन ग्लानिनाशश्चेत्यष्टके निरूपितम् । ततः स्पन्दात्मन उन्मेषस्यैकेन स्वरूपं लक्षितम् । एकेन परसमाधिघ्नभूतानां सिद्धीनां हेयतोक्ता । एकेन द्वितीयनिःष्यन्दनिर्णीतविश्वात्मतास्वभावः समावेश उक्तः । ततः समाविष्टतालाभे युक्तिरुक्तैकेन । त्रयेण पशुपाशनिर्णयः । एकेन स्पन्द-तत्त्वस्यैव बन्धमोक्षोभयपदा क्रांतिरुक्ता । द्वयेनोच्छेद्यत्वेन बन्धस्वरूपमनूदितम् । एकेन तदुच्छित्युपायमभिदधतादिसूत्रोक्तार्थो निगमित इति संक्षेपो निःष्यन्दस्य ॥

Thus by the two sections the absorption into Spanda principle for the manifestation of the state of the fully illuminated yogī has been conclusively explained which is to be brought about by both introversive (nimilana) and extroversive (unmilana) meditation both of which are to be interpenetrative (ubhaya-visargāraṇibhūtaṅ) i.e., the inner experience of the Divine has to be experienced externally also and the external experience of the Divine has to be experienced internally also.

Now in the third section of nineteen verses of entitled Vibhūti Spanda, beginning with the verse Yatheccchā (according to the desire) and ending with Cakreśvaro bhavet (he becomes the lord of the group), he (the author) having said that the higher and the lower supernormal powers arise by laying hold of the Spanda principle, and having briefly delineated the nature of bondage and liberation, concludes what has begun in the first section.

In this section, by the first two verses, the author mentions the freedom in dream on the analogy of the well-known freedom in the waking state. By the third while talking about its opposite i.e. when he does not have freedom of experience in the waking and dream state, he implicitly states that the yogī should maintain strenuous and constant endeavour. The next two verses deal with the manifestation of the knowledge of the desired object. By another verse, he describes the power of effecting things and the control of hunger, etc. By yet another verse, he describes the achievement of omniscience. By the eighth verse, he describes the disappearance of the depression of mind. After that, he defines the nature of unmeṣa or the unfoldment of spiritual consciousness which is of the nature of spanda. Another verse describes the necessity of rejecting those powers which are an obstacle in the way of the highest meditation. By another verse, the nature of identity with the entire universe as described in the second section has been mentioned for achieving absorption in the divine consciousness.¹ After that the means for achieving that absorption has been described by another verse. The next triad of verses describes the bondage of the limited individual. Another verse says that the Spanda principle prevails both in bondage and liberation. By two verses the nature of bondage has again been repeated for the sake of its being destroyed. The last one while describing the means of cutting asunder the bond emphasizes the sense of the first verse (i.e. I.1) in conclusion. This is the summary of this section.

NOTES

1. Samāveśa uktaḥ has to be read as samāveśe uktaḥ i.e. samāveśa is here in the locative case. The locative case has here to be treated as naimittikī saptamī i.e. 'samāveśe' here means for achieving samāveśa (absorption).

TRANSLATION

Now begins the commentary on the book.

In I,17, it has been said, "The fully enlightened has always the experience of Spanda tattva." In the same section, it has been said, in I, 21, "One should always be on the alert for the discernment of the spanda principle." By this an exhortation has been imparted to the partially enlightened for its constant practice in the waking state in order to attain the status of the fully enlightened one. In I, 23, 24, 25, beginning with 'which state etc', the yogī has been advised to tear the veil of deep sleep by constant, intensive, skilful practice of the means.

Now in order to prove the perfect enlightenment of the yogī by his power to rend asunder the condition of ordinary (normal) dream and deep sleep. the author is going to show his super-normal power in relation to dream.

TRANSLATION

As the sustainer of this universe (i.e. Śiva) when eagerly entreated with desire accomplishes all the desires abiding in the heart of the embodied yogī who is awake after causing the rise of the moon and the sun. 1

So also in dream, by appearing in the central nāḍī (madhye), does He surely reveal always and more vividly his desired objects to him who never desists from his zealous prayer. 2

TRANSLATION

Dhātā is one who holds everything within Himself i.e. Śiva's own being. Jāgrataḥ means 'of one who is waking' i.e. to whom his freedom has manifested itself in the waking state. Dehinaḥ means of the embodied yogī or 'of the yogī who has knowledge in the waking condition,¹ Icchābhyarthitaḥ means 'pleased on account of his discernment of the inner nature'. He brings about the objects abiding in the heart of the yogī e.g. by means of jñāna (vindu) and kriyā (nāda)², the yogī produces agitation (kṣobha) of the mind in others, the scattering of other's knowledge hither and thither, (pratibhācālanena), immobilising another's knowledge (bodhastobha), and transmission of knowledge into another (jñānasañcāra) etc.

How does He do so? By causing the rise of the moon and the sun³ i.e. of jñānaśakti, the power of knowledge, and kriyāśakti, the power of action. All that is thought about by the cognitive power (jñānaśakti) is actualized by the operative power (kriyāśakti). The great Lord entering the body of the yogī brings about various sorts of powers, e.g., transference through penetration etc. by the expansion of his apāna and prāṇa Śakti of which the quintessence is the expansion of jñāna and kriyāśakti which are brought about by laying hold of the root (i.e. the spanda principle) intuitive knowledge of which is unfolded by his compenetrative meditation (samāveśa).

According to the tradition expressed in the following verse.

"When sleep has not yet fully appeared, i.e. when one is about to fall asleep, and all the external objects (though present) have faded out of sight, then the state (between sleep and waking) is one on which one should concentrate. In that state, the Supreme Goddess will reveal Herself."

"If prāṇaśakti which is gross and thick i.e., which is expressed with sound; is made frail and subtle i.e., is expressed slowly and if a yogī meditates on such śakti in dvādaśānta,⁴ then by entering mentally in between waking and dream condition, he gains freedom of having dream experiences i.e., the dream is entirely under his control. He will have only that dream which he wants to experience" (V. Bh. 55). Thus in accordance with tradition, the sustainer (Śiva) appears in the region of the Suṣumnā of the yogī who is always intent on praying to God with the awareness of citi śakti which is present in both the practice of prāṇa (visarga) and apāna (araṇi) which are connected with exhalation (vamana) and inhalation (grāsa) and who is enjoying the sleep in which yoga is being carried on (Yoganidrā). He abiding in the susumnā region even in dream surely reveals the objects desired such as āṇava, śākta, or śāmbhava samāveśa (absorption) or other desired objects, in the mirror of his mind polished by the sap of compenetrative meditation. This yogī never suffers from infatuation in dream and deep sleep. The word dream implies deep sleep also.

In the matter of revelation of desired objects by repetition,⁵ this is the reason. The Lord never neglects to confer the grace which is the outcome of the cessation of the turbidity of Māyā and a result of his prayer which, in other words, is only the devout practice of the inner (divine) nature.

The great Lord who is of the nature of consciousness surely brings about all those things for which one prays with real inner sincerity. The word jāgrataḥ should be treated as having double meaning and should be interpreted both in the sense of 'one who is in the waking state and one who is alert about the highest principle'.

NOTES

1. Piṇḍasthajñānasya—One who has knowledge during the waking condition. The word for waking condition for the common man is jāgrat, the word of the yogī for the waking condition is piṇḍastha, the word of the jñāni for the same condition is sarvatobhadra.

2. Vindu and nāda are symbolic terms of the system. From the point of view of āṇava upāya, vindu and nāda symbolize prāṇa and apāna; from the point of view of Śākta upāya, they symbolize pramāṇa and prameya, from the point of view of Śāmbhava upāya, they symbolize jñāna and kriyā, and from the point of view of anupāya, they symbolize prakāśa and vimarśa. Here they symbolize jñāna and kriyā.

3. Somasūryodayaṁ kṛtvā—Lit. by causing the rise of the moon and the sun. Soma and Sūrya, the (the moon and sun) are symbolic terms. Soma or moon symbolizes the apāna śakti which is expressed in us in the form of inhalation and sūrya or sun symbolizes the prāṇa śakti which is expressed in us in the form of exhalation. This symbolism holds good in āṇavopāya. In connexion with Śāktopāya, soma or moon symbolizes jñāna śakti, (the power of knowledge) and sūrya or sun symbolizes kriyāśakti (the power of action). In the present context soma and sūrya mean jñāna-śakti and kriyāśakti.

In connexion with Śāmbhavopāya, soma, symbolizes Vimarśa and sūrya symbolizes prakāśa.

4. This dvādaśānta (distance of 12 fingers) refers to antaradvādaśānta i.e. inner dvādaśānta. This has three stages, viz. hṛdaya or centre of the body, Kaṇṭhakūpa or the small depression below the throat, and bhrūmadhya or the middle of the eye-brows.

5. 'By repetition' means Sauṣupt epyabhiṣṭārthān prakāśayet i.e. 'in deep sleep also He reveals the desired objects'.

Introduction to the 3rd verse

Now the author says that if a person is not thus concentrated, then he is not fit to be a yogi.

TRANSLATION

Otherwise, the Creative power of the Divine according to its characteristics, is free in manifesting always all kinds of things (usual and unusual) (to the yogī also) both in waking and dream states as in the case of the common people of the world.

COMMENTARY

TRANSLATION

If the yogī does not always pray to the sustainer of the universe according to the method described, then, in the absence of his remaining in his essential nature, the Divine Creative Power whose nature is to manifest (an object), to determine, etc. things of the usual and unusual kinds¹ is quite free to show always to yogī also similar things both in the waking and dream states, as in the case of the common people of the world. The sense is that this throws the yogī also into the pit of transmigratory existence like the common people. As is said, "The outgoing tendency of creatures is determined by the Lord's Will."

According to its characteristics this means that the Divine Creative Power is quite free to manifest things as it likes both in the waking and dream states.

NOTES

Usual and unusual—In the waking state the experience of all people is common, it is an objective experience which is common to all. In dreams the experience of each, being subjective, is unusual i.e. is not common to all.

EXPOSITION

The yogī by his prayerful attitude towards the Divine which really means by being established in his divine nature sees both in the waking and dream states what he wills to see. This is not possible for the common people. The experiences of both these states are not under their control. But if the yogī becomes unmindful and trips, he becomes subject to the same conditions both in the waking and dream states as the common people.

Introduction to the 4th and 5th verse

TEXT

TRANSLATION

Thus having established the means for cleaving asunder the conditions of dream and deep sleep in order to attain the state of the fully enlightened one, the author now elucidates with example and reason the means of absorption in the Spanda principle for the fully enlightened one and exhorts that the knowledge of the object desired to be known is also possible in this way.

Text of the Verse 4 and 5

यथा ह्यर्थोऽस्फुटो दृष्टः सावधानेऽपि चेतसि ।

TRANSLATION

Indeed just as a thing which, in spite of all the attentiveness of the mind, is perceived indistinctly at first, appears more distinctly, later, when observed with the strenuous exercise of one's power.

So when the yogī resorts to the power (of Spanda), then whatever thing (yat) actually (paramārthena) exists in whichever form (yena), in whichever place or time (yatra) in whichever state (yathā) that thing (tat) becomes at once (na cirāt) manifest in that very way (tathā).

TRANSLATION

The word hi is used in the sense of 'indeed, verily'. Indeed just as, in spite of the attentiveness of mind, on account of the drawback of distance, etc. a thing appears indistinctly at first, but later when observed again minutely with the full application of one's visual power not only appears clearly but even more clearly, even so whatever power of spanda principle (yat), exists (sthitam) in its highest form in the nature of a mass of consciousness-bliss (yena-ānandaghanatātmanā paramārthena), in one's own essential nature which is identical with Śiva (yatra), in a nondifferent way (yathā) that (tat) appears instantly (na cirāt) more distinctly in that very way (tatheti), when observed with the strenuous exercise of one's power i.e. with the strenuous practice of identity with that inner nature. Tat i.e. the word 'that' is used in the nominative case.

How? By the votary merging his so-called stage of the experient in the form of the psycho-somatic organism in his inner essential Self.

To the yogi who resorts to the power of spanda and who stimulates his so-called state of the experient consisting of the body, buddhi, etc. over and over again to the pitch of the highest, essential experient, whatever (yat) he desires to know for instance, treasure wherever (yatra) i.e. in whichever region, in whichever state (yena) e.g. in the state of actual gold, in whichever form (yathā), that at once appears.

TRANSLATION

Just as one, whose essential ingredients of the body have decayed i.e. who is as emaciated as an abstemious sage, also by resorting to the power of Spanda i.e. by absorption into spanda and by stimulating his state of the experient of prāṇa succeeds in doing that which has necessarily to be done i.e. by resorting to that power he does that which was beyond his power to do. So even he who is excessively hungry overcomes hunger, thirst¹ etc. by resorting to that power.

For one who has entered the state of the mass of spiritual consciousness, there can be no subjection to the pairs of opposites (like heat, cold, etc), for the pairs of opposites function only in the stage of prāṇa, and this in the case of the yogī. gets merged in the stage of the spiritual consciousness.

NOTES

1 Utpala Bhaṭṭa adds बुभुक्षाशब्दोऽत्रोपलक्षणार्थम् । तेन क्षुत्तृषो शोकमोहौ जरामृत्यू चेति षडूर्मयोऽपि नश्यन्तीत्यर्थः ॥ i.e. the word hunger has been used here elliptically in a generic sense implying the six waves of existence, hunger and thirst (of prāṇa), sorrow and delusion (of mind). old age and death (of body)."

TRANSLATION

When the body is pervaded by this i.e. by the spanda principle which is one's own essential Self, then as experiences of things suited to that state (i.e. the bodily state), such as states of all-knowability, all-doership (associated with the body) manifest themselves to the embodied being, so, if the yogī gets established in his imperishable Self, viz., the spiritual Consciousness recognized as such by the afore-said token, if he is steadily absorbed in that state, either by withdrawing his sense, etc. within himself (saṅkoca) as a tortoise withdraws its limbs within itself or by the device of the expansion of all-embracing consciousness (vikāsa)², then he acquires omniscience, and omnipotence—powers appropriate to Śiva everywhere i.e. from the category of Śiva down to earth.

NOTES

1. Svātmani means, as Kṣemarāja puts it, in his imperishable Self. Rāmakaṇṭha explains it as स्वस्वभावे देहादिव्यतिरिक्त-विशुद्धा ह्यचिन्मात्रवपुषि i.e. in his essential nature which is pure, spiritual, consciousness distinct from the body.

2. Saṅkoca and vikāsa—Saṅkoca connotes the practice of withdrawing the attention from the activity of the senses and turning it towards the inner reality which is the source and background of all activity.

Vikāsa means concentration on the inner reality even while the sense-organs are quite open to the external objects.

TRANSLATION

Dehe yā glāniḥ means that disappearance of (essential) delight¹ of the person who considers his body to be the self. The plunderer (viluṅṭhikā) is that which steals away the wealth of the highest consciousness, and brings about poverty in the form of limitation. It i.e. the depression owes its origin and continuance to (spiritual) ignorance² i.e. non-recognition of one's essential nature which is a compact mass of consciousness-bliss. If that ignorance is destroyed by unmeṣa, the nature of which will be described later, then how can this depression last in the absence of its cause which is ignorance? That is to say it will disappear.

In the absence of depression, the states of inevitable sufferings to the body, such as illness, etc. will be removed. To the extent to which they are removed to that extent his real nature will shine just as excessively heated gold shines when the dross is removed. Thus constant absence of depression even while he remains in the body is the glory of the great yogi.

As has been said by the great yogini Madālasā, while teaching her children:

‘Ye child, do not commit the folly of regarding the body as the self,—the body which is like a decaying covering and deserves to be rejected. This body of thine is tied to thee like a covering on account of thy good and evil deeds, and infatuation in the form of self-conceit (Ma. pu.25,14).

This also is hinted in this verse that the yogī who is desirous of limited powers when his body is permeated with the elixir of compenetrative meditation, is free from diseases like wrinkles, grey hair etc.

NOTES

1. Glāni or depression in this context means the disappearance of the essential delight (tāttvikaharṣasya kṣayah). It is, as Rāmakaṇṭha puts it, sahajānanda-hānirūpā (p. 114) the loss of innate bliss. Every body who considers his psychosomatic organism as his Self suffers from this loss. It is only when the empirical self is transcended and one is united to the metaphysical Self that he can have real happiness.

2. Ignorance here means, as Kṣemarāja puts it, cidānandaghānasva-svarūpa-apratyabhijñāna i.e. non-recognition of one’s essential nature which is a compact mass of consciousness-bliss. It does not mean ‘want of education’.

TRANSLATION

When the mind of the aspirant that is to quit one object is firmly restrained (niruddha) and does not move towards any other object, it comes to rest in a middle position between the two and through it (i.e. the middle position) is unfolded the realization of pure consciousness which transcends all contemplation." (V.Bh.62)

In accordance with this view, there is the rise of 'another' (aparodayaḥ)¹ i.e. there is the manifestation of another superb, transcendental awareness which is full of the bliss of consciousness (ciccamatkārātmanya eva lokottara ullāsaḥ syāt).

(In whom does it arise?) it arises in the yogī who is deeply engrossed i.e. deeply concentrated in one thought (ekasyāṃ cintāyām prasaktasya ekāgrībhūtasya) (What kind of thought?). Thought of a particular object or matter in which all the fluctuations of the mind are stilled (kasyāñcid ālambana-Viśeṣa-nibhṛta-vikārātmikāyām cintāyām).

(From where does that transcendental awareness arise?). It arises from the Spanda-principle in which the difference of knowledge and its object has disappeared, (agnīśomāvibhedātmanah)² in which the entire multitude of thought-constructs has been suddenly swallowed up (jhaṭīi grastasamastacintāsantateḥ) on account of the cessation of the object of thought which is due to the swell of deeper consciousness radiating from excessive concentration on that thought.

Since it is an efflorescence of that bliss of consciousness, it is known as unmeṣa. This has to be realized, this has to be sought, this can be known thus by the yogī. Svayam tamupalakṣayet—This is the meaning of this sentence—Since unmeṣa cannot be grasped objectively as ‘this’, one has to observe it within oneself by approaching it in the form of I-consciousness with an awareness completely free of all artificial effort. It has to be recognized in the form of extraordinary bliss.

Others interpret this verse in this way: In the mind of a person who is deeply engrossed in thinking of one object, that from which another thought arises and which pervades both the thoughts is unmeṣa.”

NOTES

1. Aparodayaḥ may mean the rise of another awareness or the rise of another thought. These two meanings have led to two interpretations of the verse. Kṣemarāja has taken in the former sense: others have taken it in the latter sense.

2. Agnī symbolizes pramātā or pramāṇa—knower or knowledge. Here it symbolizes knowledge pramāṇa; soma symbolizes prameya or object.

3. Vijñeyaḥ—has to be interpreted in two ways, viz. arhārtha, and śakyārtha. In the first case it means it deserves to be known or recognized, it should be known or recognized. In the latter case, it means, it can be known or recognized. Kṣemarāja has interpreted it in both the senses.

EXPOSITION

This is a very important yoga of this system. There are three important points in this verse which have to be borne in mind. Firstly, aparodayaḥ may mean the rise of another awareness or the rise of another thought. Kṣemarāja has taken it in the first sense. In this sense, it means parapramāṭṛbhāva, or the awareness of the met-empirical, the metaphysical Self. Kṣemarāja means to say that when the mind is deeply engrossed in one thought, it is completely stilled, it is restricted from indulging in another thought. It is at such a moment that the met-empirical Self reveals itself. Mind is the slayer of the Real. When the slayer is slain, then the Real reveals itself.

Secondly, one has to be on one's guard in grasping the Real. If he wants to know it as an object, he will fail miserably, for it is the Eternal Subject which can never be reduced to an object. That is why the text says svayaṃ tamupalakṣayet. Kṣemarāja rightly interprets it as idantā-viśayatvābhāvād akṛtakaprayatnāt-mnāvadhānenāhantayaivopetyātmani lakṣayet. Since the metaphysical Self cannot be objectified, there has to be an effortless awareness of it as I-consciousness shorn of all its external trappings. Similarly, Rāmakaṇṭha says:

परमार्थ-परमेश्वरः सर्वतो विविक्तः परमकारणं परमात्मा अयमहमस्मि इति प्रतिपद्येत । न हि तस्य शब्दादिवद् इदन्तया स्वरूपमुपलक्षयितुं शक्यम् ।

“This experience has to be regarded subjectively as ‘It is I, the Highest Self, the fount and source of every thing, distinct from everything else. Its nature cannot be grasped objectively as ‘this’, like sound etc.’”

Thirdly, a very important point has been stressed by Rāmakaṇṭha in this connexion. He deserves to be quoted in full:

“यस्त्वयं मन्यते—यस्यां चिन्तायां सत्याम् अपरचिन्तोदयः सा चिन्तैव चिन्तान्तरकारणं नान्तरावर्तित वस्त्वन्तरं विद्यते, यच्चिन्ताद्वयस्वरूपव्यतिरेकेण उपलक्षणीयात्मकं द्वितीयचिन्ताकारणं स्याद् इति, तं प्रति कारणभावेन कार्यभावेन च अभिमतस्य पूर्वापरीभूतस्य चिन्ताद्वयस्य एष सम्बन्धो न सिध्यति, अनुसन्धातारं तृतीयं विना । पूर्वं कारणम् अपरा च कार्यभूता चिन्ता इति योऽनुसन्धत्ते, यश्चासावनपत्नवनीयोऽनुसन्धाता सोऽनुसन्धेयचिन्ताद्वयव्यापकविशुद्धचिन्मात्र-स्वरूपः सर्वकारणमात्मैवोन्मेष इत्युक्तः ।

“Some think that the first thought is the cause of the rise of the next, there is nothing intervening between the two which apart from the two thoughts may be the cause of the second thought. (Rāmakaṅṭha has the Buddhists in mind.)

In reply, it is said that there can be no relation of cause and effect between the first and the second without a third to relate the two as cause and effect. That which relates the previous and the latter as cause and effect, that which is the undeniable relater of the two experiences, that is the pure consciousness that pervades both the thoughts, the fount and origin of every thing, that is the Self. That Self has been called unmeṣa.

TRANSLATION

From this (unmeṣa) appear (supernormal) light, (supernormal) sound, (supernormal) form, (supernormal) taste, in a short time, to the yogī who has not yet done away with the identification of the Self with the body, which, however, are only a disturbing factor (in the full realization of the Spanda principle).

TRANSLATION

From it, i.e. from unmeṣa which is being practised appear in a short time experience like the light of a star in the middle of the two eye-brows which is a generic light expressive of the entire objective world, sound which is unstruck (spontaneous) which is generic sound representing all undifferentiated words, (super-normal) form which is a glow shining even in darkness, transcendental taste experienced on the tip of the tongue. All these appear to the yogi whose identification of ‘I’ or the Self with gross, subtle body, etc.¹ has not yet dissolved. They only give him temporary satisfaction, but are a disturbing factor, indeed positive obstacle in the realization of the Spanda principle.²

As they (the ancient sages) say:

“These are obstacles in the way of meditation and are regarded as occult powers in vyutthāna (during normal consciousness after meditative absorption).” (P.Su III,37).

This verse says that supernormal light, sound, etc. are only disturbing factors to the yogī who identifies the Self with the body even though he may be intent on the introspection of unmeṣa.

NOTES

1. Et cetera refers to the causal body.
2. These powers are a source of attraction to the yogī who has not risen above the level of the psychosomatic organism.

But they are an obstacle in the way of spiritual progress, for this yogī gets stuck up in these powers, and misses the real aim of yoga, viz., realization of the essential Self or the Spanda principle.

TRANSLATION

Just as at the time of the desire to see by means of indeterminate perception in the case of paśyantī, the object desired to be seen gleams internally in an identical form, even so, when the yogī abides (avatiṣṭhate), pervading all the objects from the earth right up to Śiva as described in Svacchhanda and other works in the chapter dealing with the way of worlds (bhuvanādhivā), that is to say infusing every thing with I-consciousness like Sadāśiva, with the thought of I to begin with, relating everything, and finally with thought-free awareness embracing everything within himself, then he will experience that for himself which is the result of the bliss of absorption into the state of the highest (divine) Experient that swallows up all objective phenomena by the consciousness that blossoms out of the unification of all objectivity. Yadū avatiṣṭhate means 'when he does not swerve from the perfect accomplishment of meditation.' Svayamevāva-bhotsyate means he will experience it in his own consciousness. What is the use of expatiation in this matter ?

EXPOSITION

When the yogī sees every object as an expression of the inner divine Self, then the delusion of diversity disappears and he has the bliss of unity consciousness. He finds Śiva both within and without.

TRANSLATION

Sarvadā 'always' means 'one should keep awake in the beginning, middle, and end of awareness in all the states of waking, dreaming and deep sleep. 'keeping awake' means 'one should have full awareness, with divine vision which becomes manifest by getting hold of the Spanda principle which has been unfolded.' How? By observing all phenomena, such as blue, pleasure etc. by external perception, one should offer it to the creator, Śaṅkara i.e. one's essential nature in the light of the belief expressed in the line, 'Therefore, whether in word, or thing or thought, there is no state which is not Śiva.' 'One should offer or deposit everything' means 'one should regard it as identical with that Spanda principle whether in introversive or extroversive state, one should, by the firm grip of the initial and the final state, regard the middle state also as the congealment of the sap of consciousness'. Thus, he is not troubled by anything separate, because in everything, he acknowledges his own Self. As has been said by the author of Śrī Pratyabhijñā "O Lord, whence can there be any fear to the eternally happy one, in this world filled with his own Self, who, in thought-free state, sees entire objective phenomena as thy own form."² (Utpala sto. XIII.16).

NOTES

1. This refers to Utpaladeva who wrote Īśvarapratyabhijñā.
2. Utpaladeva also wrote a number of hymns which have been collected in a book named Utpala Stotrāvalī.

EXPOSITION

Two points have been emphasized in this verse—firstly, the awakened one should be en rapport with the Spanda principle which is his essential Self in all the states of waking, dream and deep sleep and in all conditions—the initial, the middle and the end of those states. Secondly, he should view all objective phenomena only as a manifestation of the inward Light of Consciousness and thus identical with it. Since now there is nothing which is different from his Self, he will have no trouble on any account.

TRANSLATION

That which is said to be one's real nature which is, in essence, Śaṅkara, of the nature of Light, is proclaimed in the traditional treatises by such words as Spanda, Lalita, Īśvara etc.

In accordance with the view expressed in the followning lines in Svacchanda Śāstra, being embraced by His Śakti, He is absolutely free in carrying out five (creative) acts.

“The Lord, who is the cause of the universe, endowed with His Śakti carries out the acts of manifestation (śṛṣṭi), maintenance (sthiti), withdrawal (saṃhāra), concealment (tirodhāna), and grace (anugraha).

The Power of Absolute Freedom of the Lord which is eternal and of the form of perfect I-consciousness is, in different scriptures, called in various, innumerable ways, such as, Parā (the Highest), Matsyodari (fish-bellied i.e. full of creative throb), Mahāsattā (the Highest Being), Sphurattā (the glimmer of Light), Ūrmi (wave, the great Manifestation), Sāra (the Quintessence of existence), Hṛdaya (the Heart, the Creative Centre), Bhairavi (the Śakti of Bhairava), Devī (Goddess), Śikhā (the Flame). The perfect I-consciousness of the Lord (Aham) consisting of the Highest 'A' Power and the innate 'ha' Power encloses within itself as in a bowl all the venerable letters from a to kṣa. That (aham) constitutes the śakti-Parā Vāk, the Highest Sound which is ever risen, i.e. eternal but unutterable, the great Mantra, the Life of all, which is successionless awareness that contains within itself uninterrupted series of manifestation and dissolution, which encloses within its embrace all the groups of śaktis consisting of the course of the six (ṣaḍadhvā),¹ the outcome of innumerable words and their referents.

The same supreme I-consciousness of the Lord manifesting within itself this universe of diverse objects as if moving is here referred to as Spanda, according to the etymological derivation—spandate iti spandaḥ—‘that which throbs (with life) is spanda.’ Thus when the Lord, veiling by way of sport the real nature of His Self adorned with the Highest Power (parāśakti) endowed with universal energy, desires to display manifestation in different forms, on the screen of His own Self, then His Power of Absolute Freedom (which is the Power of His I-consciousness) becomes Will which assumes the power of cognition and action. As such that Power of Absolute Freedom becomes two in the form of seed (vowel) and matrix (consonant) which respectively indicate Śiva and Śakti. It also appears as ninefold according to the division of letter-groups (vargabhedena), and fiftyfold according to the division of letters of these groups. Appearing in the form of the goddesses Aghorā, Ghorā, and Ghoratari who comprehend those letters, it brings about the fivefold act of the Lord. As has been said in the Mālinivijayottara. “That Śakti (in the form of I-consciousness) of the Creator of the world who is said to be constantly co-inhering in Him (Śiva) becomes Ichhā (Will power) when He wants to create. Listen, how She, though one, becomes many. 'This object is like this (as I have willed), not otherwise'—announcing this with perfect definiteness, she is said to be jñānaśakti (the power of knowledge) in this world. When she is oriented towards action, and decides 'let all this become like this', then creating that thing then and there, she is said to be kriyāśakti (the power of execution). Thus, though of two forms, she becomes innumerable, according to the conditions of the objects to be created. Indeed, this goddess is like a thought-gem (cintāmaṇi). Then when she assumes the aspect of mother, she is divided in two ways, nine ways, and becomes a wearer of a garland of fifty letters.

With the division of bīja (vowels) and yoni (consonants), she is of two kinds. The vowels are considered to be the bīja (seed). 'Ka' and other letters are considered to be yoni (consonants; lit. matrix). According to the division of the groups of the letters, she is of nine kinds. According to the division of letters, separately she shines with the rays of fifty (letters). In this context, bīja (the vowel) is called Śiva, and yoni (the consonant) is called Śakti.

The eight groups of letters are to be known as Aghora, etc. in succession. The same eight groups of letters have eight goddesses, such as Māheśvarī and others. from the standpoint of the division of śaktis.²

O beautiful-faced one, the greatest lord has made her fifty-fold as descriptive of the *Rudras*³ of that number as well as the śaktis of that number in succession (M.V. III, 5-13).

Further,

'The Ghoratārī Śaktis are those who, while they embrace Rudras, the elevated souls, push down and down those souls who are engrossed in the pleasure of sense-objects. They are known as aparā śaktis.

The Ghorā śaktis are those who cause, as before, attachment to the fruit of actions of mixed character and who block the path to liberation. They are known as parā-parā śaktis.

The Aghorā are those powers of Śiva who are aptly called parā by those who know the reality. They grant to the creatures the boon of Śiva-state as before. "(M.V. III, 33). Thus becoming a victim to the groups of goddesses such as Brāhmī, etc.

along with Śiva who are represented by the nine groups⁴ of letters that have arisen from the mass of sound, he, though of the nature of Śiva is regarded as bound (paśu) in the traditional texts.

A question arises here. "How is it that the Experient who is the great Lord is reduced to this state?" In order to remove this doubt, the author mentions the reason by means of an adjectival phrase, 'because he is deprived of his glory by kalā.'

Etymologically kalā (from the root 'kala'—to throw out) means 'one that throws out, that circumscribes to definite limits i.e. the power of Māyā'. The Lord thus continues in a state in which His glory is veiled by His own Māyā. This is the meaning of the phrase kalāviluptavibhavaḥ.

(Second Interpretation of Kalāviluptavibhavaḥ)

Moreover, the word Kalā also means the power of limited activity. So by kalā would mean 'by the power supported by limited activity'. This power implies also kalā, vidyā, kāla, niyati and rāga. So, the adjectival phrase kalāviluptavibhavaḥ would ultimately mean one whose characteristics of perfection, unrestrained activity, etc. are veiled by the coverings of kalā, vidyā, kāla, niyati and rāga.⁶

This may be granted. The question is 'How does he become a victim to the group of powers?' This is the reply to this question.

(Third Interpretation of Kalāviluptavibhavaḥ)

Because, he does not rest in his real nature even for a moment, being exploited by the group of powers, therefore is he called a bound soul. He is deprived of his glory by the goddesses Brāhmī and others presiding over the groups of letters, such as vowel-group, etc. or by the goddesses presiding over individual letters, such as 'a' (अ) etc., as indicated in Mālinīvijaya. As such, he is tormented by gross and subtle words which penetrate within all kinds of definite and indefinite ideas, and he feels "I am limited. I am imperfect; I may do something; this I take, this I reject, etc.," and he is thus led to joy or sorrow.

Thus he, as described above, being exploited by the group of śaktis is called paśu or bound soul.

(Fourth Interpretation of Kalāviluptavibhavaḥ)

Kalā may be taken in the sense of a part. Being deprived of his glory by a part, i.e. the innate ignorance of his real nature, he becomes limited as it were. In fact, his real nature in the form of Śiva has not gone anywhere. In absence of that, his manifestation itself would not be possible.

Being deprived of his glory by words and ideas which are narrowed down by kalās appearing in those ways, he is unable to consider himself in his real nature. This is the gist of the verse.

NOTES

1. The Śaḍadhvā (the course of the six) referred to consists of three aspects on the subjective or vācaka (word) side and three on the objective or vācya (referent) side. They are the following :

Vācaka or Śabda.

The Subjective order; the temporal order; the phonematic manifestation.

Para or abheda level

Parāpara or bhedābheda or Sūkṣma (subtle) level.

Apara or bheda or sthūla (gross) level.

Vācya or Artha (Referent)

The objective order; the spatial order; the cosmogonic manifestation.

Varṇa

Kalā

Mantra

Tattva

Pada

Bhuvana

2. The presiding deities over the groups of letters are the following :

Group of letters :

Presiding deities

- | | |
|--------------------------------------|--------------------------|
| 1. 'A' varga (the group of vowels) | Yogīśvari or Mahā-lakṣmī |
| 2. 'Ka' varga (ka, kha, ga, gha, ṅa) | Brāhmi |
| 3. 'Ca' varga (ca, cha, ja, jha, ṅa) | Māheśvari |
| 4. 'Ṭa' varga (ṭa, ṭha, ḍa, ḍha, ṅa) | Kaumārī |
| 5. 'Ta' varga (ta, tha, da, dha, na) | Vaiṣṇavī |
| 6. 'Pa' varga (pa, pha, ba, bha, ma) | Vārāhī |
| 7. 'Ya' varga (ya, ra, la, va) | Aindrī or Indrāṇī |
| 8. 'Śa' varga (śa, ṣa, sa, ha, kṣa) | Cāmuṇḍā |

3. The fifty Rudras are the following :

1. Amṛta, 2. Amṛtapūrṇa, 3. Amṛtābha, 4. Amṛtadrava, 5. Amṛtaugha, 6. Amṛtormi, 7. Amṛtasyandana, 8. Amṛtāṅga,

9. Amṛtavapu, 10. Amṛtodgāra, 11. Amṛtāśya, 12. Amṛtatanu, 13. Amṛtasecana, 14. Amṛtamūrti, 15. Amṛteśa, 16. Sarvāmradhara. All these arise from bija or vowel. The remaining thirtyfour arise from yoni or constant. They are the following :

1. Jaya, 2. Vijaya, 3. Jayanta, 4. Aparājita, 5. Sujaya, 6. Jayarudra, 7. Jayakīrti, 8. Jayāvaha, 9. Jayamūrti, 10. Jayotsāha, 11. Jayada, 12. Jayavardhana, 13. Bala, 14. Atibala, 15. Balabhadra, 16. Balaprada, 17. Balāvaha, 18. Balavān, 19. Baladātā, 20. Balesvara, 21. Nandana, 22. Sarvatobhadra, 23. Bhadramūrti, 24. Śivaprada, 25. Sumanāḥ, 26. Spṛhaṇa, 27. Durga, 28. Bhadrakāla, 29. Manonuga, 30. Kauśika, 31. Kāla, 32. Viśveśa, 33. Suśiva, 34. Kopa (Total $16+34=50$). The Rudrāṇis are the same in number and their names are the feminine gender of the above names, e.g. Amṛtā, Amṛtapūrṇā, etc.

4. According to the nine groups of letters, the goddesses are as given below. The goddess of 'A' varga (i.e. vowels, is Śiva-Śakti; the goddess of 'Kṣa' varga is yogīśvari. The other goddesses are the same as given under Note No. 2.

5. Such an adjective as gives the reason is known as hetugarbha viśeṣaṇa. So 'Kalāvilupta-vibhavaḥ' is to be understood as Kalāvilupta-Vibhavatvāt (because of his glory being deprived by kalā).

6. These are the five kañcukas or coverings of Māyā.

(i) Kalā reduces Sarvakartṛtva or omnipotence of Śiva to kīñcītkartṛtva or limited efficacy in the case of the paśu or the empirical individual.

(ii) Vidyā reduces the sarvajñatva or omniscience of Śiva to limited knowledge.

(iii) Rāga reduces the pūrṇatva or fulness of Śiva to desire for particular things.

(iv) Kāla reduces the nityatva or eternity of Śiva to limitation in respect of time.

(v) Niyati reduces the vyāpakatva (all-pervasiveness) or Svātantrya (absolute Freedom of Śiva) to limitation in respect of space and cause.

TRANSLATION

The rise in that bound soul of ideas whether pertaining to this world or the scriptures and of the knowledge of different objects associated with them leads to ruination. That marks the disappearance or subsidence of the bliss of supreme immortality i.e. of the flow of the bliss of the mass of consciousness. Though the state of supreme consciousness is present even when the ideas conveying the sense of different objects arise yet because it is not noticed, it appears to be absent. Hence it has been said that the bliss of supreme immortality disappears. By the rise of those ideas, he (the bound soul), loses his independence i.e. comes under their clutches. As has been said in Śiva-sūtra, 'Limited knowledge is the cause of bondage'. (I, 2) The sage Vyāsa also says, "In childhood, he is dependent on his parents."

Madālasā also has said, 'Do not indulge frequently in your association with material assemblage, by prating sometimes with 'O father', sometimes with 'O daughter', sometimes with 'O mother' sometimes with 'O beloved', sometimes with 'mine', sometimes with 'not mine'. (Ma. Pu. 25-15).

The rise of ideas is said to be 'tanmātragocaraḥ', because the sphere of these ideas is tanmātras which are the generic features either intense or moderate of all objects. So the phrase means 'which have different objects as their sphere'.

By this the author says: As long as there is the appearance of different objects, so long the individual is surely bound. When by means of the teaching imparted before, he has the unswerving knowledge that every thing is identical with Self, then he is liberated while alive, as has been said before, 'One who has this knowledge' etc. (II, 5).

Thus there is no inconsistency whatsoever between what has been said before, viz., “Therefore, whether it is word or object or thought, there is no state which is not Śiva and “The rise, in the bound soul, of all sorts of ideas marks the disappearance of the bliss of supreme immortality.”

EXPOSITION

As the empirical individual becomes subject to words and ideas that are the product of sensori-motor experiences, he becomes their prisoner and loses the power of creative thinking and is thus banished from the realm of immortal bliss, for that is the reality of a different dimension which is not within the province of thought-constructs. He thus becomes a bound soul.

TRANSLATION

A doubt arises here ‘If the rise of ideas in the bound soul means the disappearance of the bliss of immortality then how has it been said that he falls a victim to the group of Powers?’ The author removes this doubt in the following verse :

Text of verse 15

Brāhmī and other Powers are ever in readiness to conceal his real nature, for without the association of words, ideas cannot arise.

TRANSLATION

The particle 'ca' expressing a doubt adds another conclusive statement to remove it. The Powers which have been delineated before are ever in readiness to conceal the real nature of this bound soul, that nature which is identical with Śiva. They (the powers) are instrumental in not allowing him to discern that nature properly, though it serves as the basis of his life. As long as he is unable to recognize his real nature which is the same as the bliss of supreme immortality, so long they are definitely active in concealing it. (It is these Powers presiding over words that conceal his real nature), because the ideas that arise in him, that lead to the diffusion of knowledge, whether definite or indefinite, are not possible without the association of words, such as 'I know this.' These ideas may be either tinged with subtle internal words or may be expressed in gross speech. Even lower creatures have a hang of ideas involved in sound (serving as natural words), which is non-conventional indicative sign, something like the nod of head, in oneself indicative of inward approval. Otherwise the child cannot catch the first conventional sign being devoid of the power of inwardly thinking out the pros and cons of a matter. Ideas associated with gross words are a matter of selfexperience for all.

EXPOSITION

Verses 13, 14 and 15 describe how the empirical individual becomes bound and forgets his essential nature. The individual becomes a tool of ideas. His ideas are oriented towards sense-objects and the pleasure derived from them. The ideas are entirely governed by words. Words have a tremendous power over his life.

Thought-constructs and verbalization become the governing influences of his life. He becomes totally oblivious of the essential Self, for that can never be known as an object. The ideas and words toss him about and do not allow him to introspect within and have an awareness of the inward haven of his life. Ideas and words are all conditioned. The essential Self is unconditioned. The life of the empirical individual is confined within the prison of the conditioned. The unconditioned cannot be known by the conditioned. It is only when the individual frees himself from the shackle of ideas and words that he is free to have an immediate, direct awareness of Self.

TRANSLATION

Concluding what has been said in the previous three verses and strengthening the previously described identity of this extensive objectivity with the generic Spanda principle, the author defines in the following verse liberation as identical with the recognition of that (Spanda) and bondage as identical with its non-recognition.

Text of the 16th Verse

TRANSLATION

‘That’-this has been defined by the previous three verses. Iyam—This one, the operative power which is one's own real nature i.e. of the nature of consciousness identical with Śiva. She has been called ‘this,’ because she manifests herself in the form of objectivity. She is the venerable Spanda principle. She is known as operative power (kriyā śakti), because she brings about the state of variety of the universe. As described before, she exists in Śiva who has assumed the role of a bound soul. She besprinkles this bound soul who is identified with prāṇa and puryaṣṭaka with a drop of I-consciousness which makes him an agent or doer. Reduced to this state, he does not recognize his real nature which is veiled by her and gets involved in the misery of seizing and relinquishing. Thus she becomes a source of bondage. When the yogī recognizes this operative power as the Supreme power, (parā śakti), the means of approach to his real nature which is Śiva, then according to the view of Vijñānabhairava expressed in the following lines, she brings about the highest achievement full of supreme bliss :

“When in one who enters the state of Śakti (i.e. who is identified with Śakti), there ensues the feeling of non-distinction¹ (between Śakti and Śiva), then he acquires the state of Śiva, (for) in the āgamas (iha), she (śakti) is declared as the door of entrance (into Śiva) (V. Bh. 20)” or when he, in spite of the dispersion of definite and indefinite ideas, regards the entire objectivity as an aspect of his own Self² which in its nature is Śiva, then also she (śakti) brings about the same achievement.

NOTES

1. The non-distinction between Śiva and Śakti referred to in the verse quoted from Vijñānabhairava means in yogic terms the meeting point or junction between two polarities. In āṇava-upāya, the meeting point is between prāṇa and apāna in the centre or hṛdaya as it is called in this yoga. This centre in the body is the depression a little above the diaphragm. It is here that prāṇa and apāna meet. At this point, śakti becomes the door of entrance to Śiva.

In Śāktopāya, the central point between pramāṇa and prameya and in Śāmbhava upāya, the central point between jñāna and kriyā constitute the nirvibhāga or non-distinction of Śiva and Śakti.

2. This is the Śāmbhava form of realization.

EXPOSITION

The power of ideation and verbalization is an aspect of the kriyā śakti of Śiva. When the empirical individual considers kriyāśakti as a power of his psycho-somatic organism, he is bound by its limitations and suffers. When he regards this kriyāśakti only as an aspect of parāśakti, the meeting point of prāṇa and apāna, pramāṇa and prameya, jñāna and kriyā, human and divine, then he is liberated.

TRANSLATION

Besieged by puryaṣṭaka which rises from tanmātras and exists in mind, I-feeling, and the determinative faculty, he (the bound soul) becomes subservient and undergoes the experiences that arise from it in the form of ideas about certain objects and the pleasure or pain that accrues from them. Owing to the continuance of the puryaṣṭaka, he (the bound soul) leads transmigratory existence. We are 'therefore' going to explain what causes the extirpation of this transmigratory existence. 17-18

TRANSLATION

He undergoes the experiences arising from the puryaṣṭaka. Since there arises the experience of pleasure, etc. through the ideas, therefore, on account of the emergence of these ideas, the bound soul becomes subservient i.e. through the association of words, he is, at every step, driven hither and thither by Brāhmī and other goddesses. He is not independent like the fully awakened yogī.

Owing to the continuance of that puryaṣṭaka, the residual traces of cravings and desires lying submerged in it are awakened again and again and thus he transmigrates from one form of life to another, getting bodies suited for the appropriate experiences of those lives. Thus he assumes and gives up body after body (i.e. at each birth he assumes a body and at each death, he gives it up).

As it is so, therefore we are going to explain immediately the cause i.e. the easy means of the extirpation of the transmigratory tendency of this individual besieged by the puryaṣṭaka through the total extermination of the impurities inherent in it. The author has himself described the means in this treatise. The use of the present tense here conveys the sense of both 'past' and 'future' according to the sūtra of pāṇini, "The present tense is optionally used to indicate the near (immediate) past or future."

EXPOSITION

These two verses are very important inasmuch as they give the rationale of the transmigratory life of the bound soul. The previous verses say that on account of the play of Māyā śakti, the soul loses its pristine jñāna and kriyā śakti and comes to have only limited knowledge and limited power of action. Secondly, he falls a prey to the veiled powers that arise from the multitude of words. In his present life, he acquires ideas through his experience of sense-objects, and education, but these ideas are not possible without words. So ultimately words come to acquire tremendous influence over his life.

Now verses 17 and 18 tell us how the future destiny of the individual is determined. In this the puryaṣṭaka plays the most important role. Man is a very complex being. He has not only a physical body but also a subtle one known as puryaṣṭaka which consists of the five tanmātras or the subtle aspects of the gross physical objects and buddhi, manas and ahamkāra. The impressions of our desires and thoughts are deposited in this puryaṣṭaka. When a man dies, it is only his physical body that is dissolved. The puryaṣṭaka remains as the subtle vehicle of the soul after his death. As has already been said, it contains the residual traces of the desires, etc. of the previous life. The desires and ideas deposited in the puryaṣṭaka are not inert elements but tremendous psychic forces seeking expression. So in the next life, man gets a body suited for the expression of the desires, etc., deposited in the puryaṣṭaka and is born in an environment suited for that expression.

The puryaṣṭaka plays a double role. In the present life, our ideas are formed according to our interests, and desires. The puryaṣṭaka is the repository of our interests and desires. As verse 17 says, taduttham pratyayodbhavam, i.e. our ideas are largely determined in the present life by the constitution of our puryaṣṭaka, and our future life is wholly determined by our puryaṣṭaka. That is why Kṣemarāja says, Puryaṣṭakātmakamalocchedanena tasya (samsṛteḥ) vināśaḥ i.e. 'The transmigratory existence can be stopped by the extermination of the impurities of the puryaṣṭaka.'

Introduction to the 19th Verse

TEXT

एतत् प्रतिपादयन् आद्यं सूत्रोक्तमर्थं निगमयति—

TRANSLATION

While substantiating the above, the author sums up the sense of what has been said in the first verse :

Verse 19

यदा त्वेकत्र संरूढस्तदा तस्य लयोदयौ ।
नियच्छन्भोक्तृतामेति ततश्चक्रेश्वरो भवेत् ॥ १९ ॥

Yadā tvekatra saṃrūḍhas tadā tasya layodayau/
Niyacchan bhokṭṛtām eti tataścakreśvaro bhavet// 19

TRANSLATION

When, however, he is firmly rooted in that supreme Spanda principle, then bringing the emergence and dissolution of the puryaṣṭaka entirely under his control, he becomes the real enjoyer and thenceforth the lord of the collective whole of the śaktis.

TRANSLATION

When, however, he, by constant practice of the means that have been taught of entering into the highest principle, becomes fully and unswervingly established in the Spanda principle, which is the perfect I-consciousness i.e. when he becomes identical with it, then he can bring under his control the emergence and the dissolution of the puryaṣṭaka referred to in the previous verse and through it also of the universe by means of the introversive and extroversive meditation, and in accordance with the principle established in the first verse, he, by bringing about the manifestation and dissolution of the universe by means of the one essential nature which is Śaṅkara becomes the Supreme Enjoyer, and thus by assimilating to himself all the objective categories from the earth upto Śiva by the process of recognition rises to the status of the Supreme Experient that he was already (satīm eva). Thenceforward he becomes the lord of the śaktis referred to in the first verse i.e. of the collective whole of the rays of his essential Self. In other words, he attains to the highest lordship in this very body.

Thus the glorious Vasugupta, showing the sameness of the great reality both in the beginning and end of the book, brings out the importance of this Śāstra as the essence and crown of the entire secret doctrine of Śaivism. May there be good to all.'

In this Spandanirṇaya, this is the third section entitled Vibhūtiṣpanda.

EXPOSITION

This verse describes the end of the journey. A spark of the Divine flame descends into matter and forgets its divine origin. Like an exile it wanders into distant lands and in different forms. At the human stage, it acquires the gift of speech and mentation. It has now reached a definite station in the evolutionary march. The human being as now known sows his wild oats, reaps the consequences and learns the inexorable laws of life in the bitter school of experience. A time comes when he is filled with nostalgia, and now begins his journey homeward. He has not to go far. He has only to throw off the mask of the pseudo-I and enter his essential, real I, which is the Spanda, the heart-beat of Śiva. He now becomes what he always was. The universe is no longer a foreign land. The I and the This, the Subject and the object become one. That is an experience for which there is no word in the human language.

Section IV

INTRODUCTION

ग्रन्थान्ते परमां स्पन्दभूमिं गुरुगिरं च श्लेषोक्त्या स्तौति

TRANSLATION

In the end of the book, the author, by means of a double entendre lauds the Spanda state as well as the power of the word of his guru (teacher).

Verse 1

अगाधसंशयाम्भोधिसमुत्तरणतारिणीम् ।

TRANSLATION

I pay my homage to that wonderful speech of my guru which is like a boat for crossing the fathomless ocean of doubt and is full of words which yield wonderful meaning (in the case of the guru).

I offer my reverential prayer to Spanda in the form of parā vāk, the Supreme divine I-consciousness which is full of wonderful transcendental bliss, and which acts like a boat in crossing the fathomless ocean of doubt regarding my essential nature (in the case of Spanda in the form of parāvāk).

TRANSLATION

‘Tām’ (that) means that uncommon goddess who, in accordance with the view that “Śakti is the door of entrance into Śiva,” acts as an ācāryā (teacher), inasmuch as she is the means of entry into the state of Śiva. Moreover ‘gurum’ means mahatīm or supreme, mahatīm bhārati therefore, means parā vāk, the Supreme Power of Sound (of the Divine). She is called ‘supreme’ inasmuch as she encloses within her embrace paśyanti etc.

Gurubhārati also means ‘the exhortative speech of the teacher’. ‘Citrām’ means ‘wonderful’ in the case of the teacher, and ‘of the form of transcendental bliss’ in the case of parāvāk. ‘Vande’ means ‘I pay homage’ in the case of the teacher, and ‘I enter it, because it is the Supreme’ in the case of parāvāk. And I make my reverential salutation to her with all eagerness who, because of her gleaming presence in all states (i.e. paśyanti, madhyamā and vaikharī) throws a hint of essential reality and I make her favourably disposed towards me in order that I may enter into her who is always immersed in the awareness of the essential nature.

How is that Bhārati? Who is like a boat for crossing successfully the fathomless, uncrossable ocean of stains of doubt viz. ‘the absence of certainty regarding the Supreme I’. This doubt is called ocean because of its expansiveness. She is like a boat because she enables one to cross this ocean in the right manner. This simile is applicable in both cases.

Vicitra-arthapadām in the case of parāvāk means ‘one whose stages of rest (in the form of Samādhi) display wonderful states of bliss’; in the case of the teacher’s speech, it means “that which has wonderful words and meanings arranged in a pleasant order”.

TRANSLATION

This knowledge described by the śāstra is a treasure inasmuch as it is the means for the attainment of the highest aim of human existence. Though it is difficult of attainment, Vasugupta obtained it on the surface of a rock as the essence of Śaṅkara's instruction in a dream.

The meaning of hṛdguhāntakṛtanihiteḥ is the following: Hṛt or heart is of the nature of prakāśa (light) or consciousness and vimarśa or awareness of the consciousness. This heart or prākāśa-vimarśa is like a cave, for like a cave it provides room for entry into the all-of-reality. The whole phrase means 'of him who has established himself with certainty in this cave of the heart' i.e. of Vasugupta. Just as this treasure of knowledge was for the good of the teacher, named Vasugupta, so it will be for the good of all, for there is no restriction of rules governing the recipient of this knowledge. When they preserve it carefully in the cave of their heart and guarding it against those who have not got the same faith, assimilate it fully by firm realization, then it would always be for their good. 'For their good' means 'for the acquisition of the competence of entry into their real nature which is always Śaṅkara'. May there be good to all!

Concluding Remarks by Kṣemarāja

Though there is no end to the number of commentaries on this Śāstra, and though there are intelligent people, yet they are mostly superficial by nature, but they who are competent, who are intelligent swans and are skilled in grasping the essence, know the special merit of my commentary. My teacher could not put up with being bracketed with the numerous other ordinary run of commentators, so he did not write any commentary on Spanda-śāstra. I have previously expressed a bit of my special point of view in Spanda-sandoha. Today, owing to the fervent entreaty of my pupil named Śūra who has experienced entry into the power of Rudra, who is Śiva Himself, I, Khemarāja, have given conclusive explanation with the help of the splendid detailed exposition of my teacher.

They are not qualified for the study of this śāstra whose intelligence is not purified by the teaching of right sort of teachers, whose doubt has not been shattered by the esoteric teaching of Śaiva discipline, and who, being of tender intellect, have not tasted previously the nectar of Pratyabhijñā. This may, however, be enjoyed by the other high-souled ones.⁵

All glory to this Supreme Creative Pulsation (Spanda) of consciousness which is the abode of flashing, unparalleled delight, whose majesty of path extends to far-reaching areas from the earth up to Śiva, which is variegated by the display of various states of creation, maintenance and withdrawal and of whose extension this universe is just a minute particle.⁶

This is the work of Kṣemarāja who has received instruction from Abhinavagupta, the great devotee of the great Lord, the grand pupil of the author of Īśvarapratyabhijñā.

GLOSSARY OF TECHNICAL TERMS

A (अ)

A (अ) : Symbol of Śiva, short form of anuttara (the Supreme) the one letter that pervades all the other letters of the alphabet.

Akula ; Śiva or अ

Akrama : Successionless manifestation of the essential nature.

Akṛtrima : Natural; inartificial.

Ākhyāti : Primal Ignorance.

Agni (Symbolic) : Pramātā — knower or subject.

Agniṣomamayam : The universe which is of the nature of pramāṇa (knowledge) and prameya (object).

Ajñānam : The primal limitation (mala). Being inherent in Puruṣa, it is known as Pauruṣa Ajñāna, on account of which he considers himself as of limited knowledge and activity.

Being in Buddhi, it is known as Bauddha Ajñāna on account of which one forms all kinds of āśuddha vikalpas —thought-constructs devoid of essential Reality.

Aghora : The merciful Śiva.

Adhikāra : Office, prerogative, right.

Adhiṣṭhāna : Substratum, support, base.

Adhiṣṭhātṛ : The superintending, governing, presiding principle.
Aṇu-One that breathes i.e. the limited, conditioned experient.

Asat : Non-being.

Aśuddhi : Impurity, limitation.

Ahaṃkāra : I-making principle, I-feeling of the empirical self.

Ahantā : I-consciousness.

Ā (आ)

Āṇava upāya : The yoga whereby the individual utilizes his senses, prāṇa and manas for Self-realization. It is also known as Āṇava yoga, Bhedopāya and Kriyāyoga or Kriyopāya.

Āṇava samāveśa : Identification with the Divine by the above means.

Ātma-lābha : Realization of Self.

Ātma-viśrānti : Resting in the Self.

Ātma-vyāpti : Realization of the Self without the realization of the all-inclusive Śiva-nature.

Ānanda : Bliss; the letter 'ā', symbolizing śakti.

Ānanda upāya : Realization of Śiva-nature without any yogic discipline. Also known as Ānanda yoga or Anupāya.

Ābhoga : Expansion; camatkāra or spiritual delight.

I (इ)

Ichhā : Will; Representing the letter 'इ' (i).

Ichhopāya : Śāmbhava upāya, also known as Ichhā yoga.

Ichhā-śakti : The inseparable innate Power of Parama Śiva intent on manifestation; that inward state of Parama Śiva in which jñāna and kriyā are unified; the predominant aspect of Sadāśiva.

Idantā : This-consciousness; objective consciousness.

Indu : Prameya or object; apāna; kriyā śakti.

Īśvara-tattvá : The fourth tattva, counting from Śiva. The consciousness of this tattva is 'This am I'. Jñāna is predominant in this tattva.

Īśvara-bhaṭṭāraka : The presiding deity of the Mantresvaras residing in Īśvara tattva.

U (उ)

Uccāra : A particular technique of concentration on Prāṇa śakti under Āṇava Upāya.

Ucchalattā : The creative movement of the Divine ānanda bringing about manifestation and withdrawal.

Udaya : Rise, appearance, creation.

Udāna : The vital vāyu that moves upwards. The śakti that moves up in Suṣumnā at spiritual awakening.

Udyama : The sudden spontaneous emergence of the Supreme I-consciousness.

Unmeṣa : Lit. Opening of the eye.

- (1) From the point of view of svabhāva or the essential nature of the Divine, it means the emergence of the Divine I-consciousness.
- (2) From the point of view of manifestation, it means the externalizing of Icchā śakti, the start of the world process.
- (3) From the point of view of Śaiva yoga, it means the emergence of the spiritual consciousness which is the background of the rise of ideas.
- (4) Representing the letter 'u'.

Upalabdḥ : The Experient, knower or subject.

Upalabdhi : Cognition, awareness.

Ū (ऋ)

Ūrdhva mārga : Upward path; suṣumnā.

Ka (क)

Kañcuka : The coverings of Māyā, throwing a pall over pure consciousness and converting Śiva into jīva. They are (1) Kalā, (2) (aśuddha) Vidyā, (3) Rāga, (4) Niyati and, (5) Kāla.

Karaṇa : The means of jñāna and kriyā—

Karaṇeśvarī : Khecari, gocari, dikcari and bhūcari cakra.

Kartṛtva : The state of being the subject.

Karmendriya : The five powers and organs of action—speaking (vāk), handling (hasta), locomotion (pāda), excreting (pāyu), sexual action (upastha).

Kalā : (1) The śakti of consciousness by which all the thirtysix principles are evolved, (2) Part, particle, aspect, (3) Limitation in respect of activity (kiñcitkartṛtva) (4) The subtlest aspect of objectivity, viz; Śāntyātītā, Śāntā, Vidyā, Pratiṣṭhā, and Nivṛtti.

Kalācakra ; Mātṛcakra, Śakticakra, Devicakra, the group of letters from 'a' to 'kṣa'.

Kalā śarīra : That of which the essential nature is activity;
Kārma mala.

Ka (क)

Kāraṇa : Cause.

Kārya : Effect; objectivity.

Kārma mala : Mala or limitation due to karma.

Kāla adhvā : Temporal course of manifestation, viz., Varṇa, mantra, pada.

Kāla tattva ; Time— past, present and future, determined by the sense of succession.

Kāla Śakti : The power of the Divine that determines succession.

Ku (कु)

Kuṇḍalī or Kuṇḍalinī : The creative power of Śīva; a distinct śakti that lies folded up in three and a half folds in Mūlādhāra.

Kumbhaka : Retention of prāṇa.

Kula : All-transcending light of consciousness; śakti manifesting herself in 36 tattvas.

Kulāmnāya : The Śākta system or doctrine of realizing the Supreme by means of all letters from (a) to (kṣa).

Kulamārga : The discipline for attaining to the all-transcending light of consciousness; Śāmbhava upāya.

Kra (क़)

Krama : Realization of the Supreme by means of purification of vikalpas (determinate ideas) through successive stages (Krama). Krama employs śāktopāya. It is also known as Mahānaya or Mahārtha darśana.

Kṛtrima : Constructed by vikalpa or determinate idea; pseudoreality.

Kriyā yoga : Āṇava upāya, also known as kriyopāya.

Kriyā Śakti : The power of assuming any and every form (Sarvākārayogitvaṃ kriyāśaktiḥ).

Kṛīḍā : Play or sport of the Divine.

Khecarī cakra : The cakra or group of the śaktis that move in the expanse of consciousness of the empirical subject.

Khecarī Mudrā : The bliss of the vast expanse of spiritual consciousness, also known as divya mudrā or Śivāvasthā (the state of Self).

Khyāti : Jñāna; knowledge; wisdom.

Ga (ग)

Gaganāṅganā : Cit śakti, consciousness power.

Garbha : Akhyāti, primal ignorance, Mahāmāyā.

Guṇatraya : The three genetic constituents Sattva, rajas, tamas.

Gocarī : Sub-species of Vāmeśvarī, connected with antaḥkaraṇa of the experient. 'Go' means 'sense'. Antaḥkaraṇa is the seat of the senses; hence Gocarī is connected with antaḥkaraṇa.

Granthi : Psychic tangle; psychic complex.

Grāhaka : Knower, Subject; Experient.

Grāhya : Knowable; object of experience.

Gha (घ)

Ghorā śaktis : The Śaktis or deities that draw the jīvas towards worldly pleasures.

Ghoratārī śaktis : The śaktis or deities that push the jīvas towards a downward path in samsāra.

Ca (च)

Cakra : The group or Collective whole of śaktis.

Cakreśvara : The master or lord of the group of śaktis.

Candra : Prameya or object of knowledge, the apāna prāṇa or nāḍī (channel or nerve).

Camatkāra : Bliss of the pure I-consciousness; wondrous delight of artistic experience.

Caramakalā : The highest phase of manifestation known as Śāntyātītā or Śāntātītā kalā.

Ci (चि)

Cit : The Absolute; foundational consciousness; the consciousness that is the unchanging principle of all changes.

Citta : The limitation of the Universal Consciousness manifested in the individual mind, the mind of the empirical individual.

Citi : The consciousness-power of the Absolute that brings about the world-process.

Cidānanda : (1) The nature of ultimate Reality consisting of consciousness and bliss (2) The sixth stratum of ānanda in uccāra yoga of āṇava upāya.

Ce (चे)

Cetana : Parama Śiva, Self, Conscious individual.

Cetya : Knowable, object of consciousness.

Cai (चै)

Caitanya : The foundational Consciousness which has absolute freedom of knowing and doing, of jñāna and kriyā śakti.

Cha (छ)

Cheda : Cessation of prāṇa and apāna by sounding of anacka (vowel-less) sounds.

Ja (ज)

Jagat : The world process.

Jagadānanda : The bliss of the Self or the Divine appearing as the universe, the bliss of the Divine made visible.

Jā (जा)

Jāgrat avasthā : The waking condition.

Jāgrat jñāna : Objective knowledge common to all people in waking condition.

Jāgrat : Esoteric meaning—Enlightenment, undeluded awakening of consciousness at all levels.

Ji (जी)

Jiva : The individual soul, the empirical self whose consciousness is conditioned by the saṃskāras of his experience and who is identified with the limitations of his subtle and gross constitution.

Jivanmukta : The liberated individual who, while living in the physical body, is not conditioned by the limitation of his subtle and gross constitution and believes the entire universe to be an expression of Śiva or his highest Self.

Jivanmukti : Experience of liberation while still living in the body.

Jñā (ज्ञ)

Jñāna : Spiritual wisdom; limited knowledge (which is the source of bondage).

Jñāna yoga : Śākta upāya.

ŚIVA SŪTRAS

The Yoga of Supreme Identity

Jaideva Singh

Śiva sūtras are considered to be a revealed book of the Yoga: Supreme identity of the individual self with the Divine. A long introduction, together with an abstract of each sūtra, throws a flood of light on the entire system of Śaiva Yoga.

PRATYABHIJÑĀHRDAYAM

The Secret of Self-recognition

Jaideva Singh

This work is a digest of the Pratyabhijñā system of Kashmir Śaiva philosophy prepared by Kṣemarāja, avoiding all polemics. Pratyabhijñā means recognition. Jīva is Śiva; by identifying himself with his body, Jīva has forgotten his real nature. This teaching is meant to enable Jīva to recognise his own real self, i.e. Śiva and to attain 'at-one-ment' with ŚIVA.

VIJÑĀNABHAIRAVA OR DIVINE CONSCIOUSNESS

Jaideva Singh

A classical treatise of yoga practices and philosophy according to the Kashmir tradition of Śaivism. Vijñānabhairava is a very ancient book on Yoga. It studiously eschews mechanical worship, external rites and ceremonies and goes directly to the heart of the problem of the union of human consciousness with the Divine. It describes 112 types of yoga. For this purpose, it makes full use of all the aspects of human life—prāṇa, manas, imagination and intuition.
